II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

New India, Madras, July 1st, 1916.

Improvement in the pay of head constables and constables.

1. New India, of the 1st July, remarks:—"We have often drawn attention to the miserably low pay of constables, Rs. 8 being their wages for the first five years. It is raised to Rs. 10 for the first three years, and then to Rs. 11 for another three years rising to Rs. 12 and Rs. 13. Even the highest is not a living wage, and constables cannot be much blamed for taking 'illegal gratifications' when they and their families live in a state of perennial under-feeding. It is true that with 20,419 constables to provide for even a small rise entails a big expenditure. But if the corps d'elite were not so very much overpaid, the constables might be given a decent wage."

Indian Patriot, Madras, July 1st, 1916.

The new forest policy.

2. The Indian Patriot, of the 1st July, writes:—"In the speech which His Excellency Lord Pentland delivered at the Coimbatore Forest College are to be found, if we may so describe it, traces of a new forest policy. The administration of the forests on the lines hitherto carried on had shaken all popular belief in any forest policy being of advantage to the people. In fact the poor villager has looked upon it as a special invention to oppress him, to rob him of his living, and to annoy him in a hundred heartless ways. . . . . The forest guard, like the police constable, has come to be looked upon as the natural enemy of the people, and enough evidence has been let in at the Forest Commission to depict these forest subordinates as Germans perpetrating havoc on our village Belgians. . . . . The browsing of the goat, the criminal case against the woman charged with the great crime of plucking a pie worth of grass for which she is fined Rs. 10—Sir Harold Stuart would have the wretch go on appeal against the decision of a trembling subordinate judiciary —would cease to be the prominent features of forest administration. . . . . The Indian public will be very grateful to His Excellency if he would call for a conference of Forest officials and definitely lay down a programme of work to be carried out for the next twenty years. If necessary, experts should be obtained from the best developed forest areas of Europe. The complaint about absence of working plans must cease. Unless some practical steps in this direction are taken at present by His Excellency, who has expressed his ideas upon the subject, and who is known to believe in a grand future for the Indian forests, all these excellent ideas and hopes will disappear with his departure."

Railway officials and the Honours list.

3. New India, of the 28th June, says:—"For some days past an agitation has been kept up in some Anglo-Indian journals that the Government of India do not do justice to the Railway department in framing the Honours list. While we feel that there may be some justification for the grievance, it should not be lost sight of that railways in India are most palpably mismanaged; and what is even more shocking, while they live mainly on the proceeds from Indian passengers and traders, they are not mindful of their interests. . . . . If, for insolence, waste, mismanagement and mischief any set of people are to be noticed, then the Railway officers will deserve recognition; but not under any other circumstances."

4. The Malabar Herald, of the 24th June, writes:—"The Europeans who are enjoying the salubrious climate of Coonoor Hills seem to have an aversion to Indian Rulers. That is, indeed, regrettable. It would seem that the members of the Coonoor Club approached the Madras Government with a view to prevent His Highness the Maharaja of Travancore from purchasing a bungalow for his use during summer, as it is located in close proximity to their Club in Coonoor. . . . . The action of Government in connection with the proposal of His Highness the Maharaja of Travancore for the purchase of a building in Coonoor cannot be regarded as being commendable. The proximity of an Indian Ruler's residence to a European Club can scarcely prove a nuisance to the latter, since the mode of living which he follows is simple and refined. Apart from this reason, there are several others which can hardly justify the treatment accorded to His Highness the Maharaja of Travancore who has invariably been generous and exceptionally kind to Europeans in his State, both as a Ruler and a personal friend."

Social prejudices of Europeans.

5. In a leader under this heading, the Cochin Argus, for the week ending 24th June, remarks:—"Of course, we are aware that there is a political school in India, including several prominent leaders, which sincerely believes that India is fully qualified for complete self-rule, but it is grossly incorrect to say or to imply that this school represents intelligent Indian public opinion generally. As a matter of fact, this school represents only itself when it contends that India is fit to govern itself and will not be satisfied with anything less than the same status which is enjoyed by the self-governing Colonies. The most formidable barrier to self-rule in India, and it is a barrier which does not exist in the self-governing Dominions, is the peculiar social system of this country. As long as this system remains what it is, self-rule for India would merely be self-rule for certain privileged sections of the population. It would certainly not be self-rule for the masses of the people, and the latter, without doubt, would also cease to enjoy the benefits of British rule."

6. The Hindu, of the 26th June, observes:—"The public meeting held at Bombay on Saturday last, under the auspices of the Indian Press Association, with the object of upholding the liberty of the Press and of protesting against the Press Act of 1910, seems to have been a very successful one, and the resolutions passed at the meeting will command the approval of every thinking man in the country. The Press Act was passed in a moment of panic without due deliberation on the part of the Government and without the public being afforded an opportunity to express their opinion, and under special circumstances which no longer exist."

7. The West Coast Spectator, of the 27th June, states:—"A certain contemporary who is very enthusiastic about Home Rule remarks that the President of the forthcoming session of the Congress should be an Home Ruler! Verily, this is too much. We suppose Congressmen all over India should bow before the mandates of this tremendous organ of 'public opinion'! The Congress has not yet identified itself with the Home Rule League. It cannot, therefore, have any right to dictate terms, and if our Home Rule friends persist in dictating to the Congress we know what the result will be."

The Wednesday Review, of the 28th June, remarks:—"We have repeatedly taken exception in these columns to the unseemly manner in which discussions about congress presidentship are allowed to be carried on in India. It cannot be helped, perhaps, when the candidates have to be nominated by different committees and finally approved by the Reception Committee of the place where the congress meets. We wonder if the thinking section of congressmen really believe that this system is better than the

The time limit in Legislative Councils.

8. Referring to the last meeting of the Bombay Legislative Council at which His Excellency the Governor enforced the time limit during the Hon'ble Mr. Wacha's speech, New India, of the 28th June, says:—"The Governor, it will be remembered, protested against Mr. Wacha's use of those expressions, appealing to the council to judge for themselves whether he had at any time restrained members from making informing speeches of reasonable length. Evidently Mr. Wacha's speeches did not come up to the mark—that is at any rate what we are asked to assume, but needless to say, the people of India know Mr. Wacha too well to permit any such inference. Moreover it is noteworthy that the time limit came into operation only when Mr. Wacha passed on to a subject concerning which the bureaucracy is very sensitive—a fact that has to say something on the subject. . . . . We are aware of several insipid and worthless speeches permitted to go beyond the limit, but when our recognised leaders attempt to acquaint the Government with the true facts of the situation, the Presidents feel as if the whole legislative structure would collapse if the speaker were permitted to conclude his speech in the usual fashion. . . . . We confess we do not understand the policy underlying the time limit or the method of its application. What are the councils meant for, unless it be for the popular representatives to speak out what they consider to be the views of the people? If that is so—we know the claim will be agreed to by all in theory—what earthly use is served by compelling persons like Gokhale, Wacha and Sir P. M. Mehta to resume their seat with unfinished speeches? . . . . The rule concerning the time limit only shows how ridiculous have been some of the regulations, and how ineffective they have tried to make the Minto-Morley Reforms. That, at any rate, is the impression confirmed by the present incident."

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, June 28th, 1916.

The Indian Emigrant and the Press Act.

9. The Wednesday Review, of the 28th June, writes:—"We are glad to hear that the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras, has withdrawn the order demanding security from the editor and proprietor of the Indian Emigrant, a monthly journal published in Madras, in the interests of the emigrants from Madras settled in other parts of the world. The editor frankly confessed his inability to conduct the journal if the security was insisted upon, but that, we suppose, did not enter into the calculations of the Chief Presidency Magistrate when he cancelled the original order. The editor was not offered by unknown friends the security money; perhaps he was not well known and meetings were not got up by his friends protesting against the action of the Government. . . . . It shows clearly enough that the Government of Madras are not pursuing a policy of vindictiveness in regard to the Indian press and that they are willing to reconsider their position whenever necessary. We are sorry that Mrs. Besant has rendered it impossible for the Government to take a similar action in her case; but she insists upon her 'right'. . . . . Even supposing that the Government of Madras had acted in anger—for we do not think they are capable of doing anything in spite—a more conciliatory attitude would have avoided the contretemps. But Mrs. Besant was advised otherwise."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, June 29th, 1916.

Income-tax administration in Madras City.

10. The Indian Patriot, of the 29th June, observes:—"Serious complaints are coming from all parts of the city about the ways of income-tax officers; and some petitions addressed to the Board, which we have perused, compel us to invite the attention of the Government to the situation. For income-tax inspectors to approach assessees direct and ask for accounts to ascertain their income is, we admit, a highly objectionable action. . . . . As a result of the reorganization three men of the grade of tahsildar were deputed to do work as income-tax inspectors at a much increased cost. Of these, excepting one who had previously worked as Tahsildar of Madras, the rest had no experience of the trade conditions of the city. . . . . The whole situation, in short, is quite unsatisfactory, giving rise to a number of complaints from the public. We hope that very prompt steps will be taken to relieve the situation."

11. New India, of the 29th June, has the following:—"Our readers are aware that this newspaper is persecuted by the administration. We have already referred in these columns to the action which makes it impossible for travellers to buy a copy of New India at any of the railway stations. To-day we receive the following telegram from our Coimbatore correspondent:—

The persecution of New India.

NEW INDIA, Madras, June 29th, 1916.

"Coimbatore, June 29.—The Principal, Madras Forest College, Coimbatore, refuses to issue a ticket of admission to the prize distribution function to New India's representative.

"The Forest College is a Government institution, built out of, and maintained by, public funds; the salary of the Principal is paid out of taxation levied on the people. Under the circumstances we do not know how to characterise the action of the Principal. Has he refused admission on his own authority or under instruction from the Government? That his shameful conduct will be condemned by the public we have no hesitation in saying. Such high-handed behaviour cannot but be characterised as scandalous. . . . . Our readers will of course take note of how certain of the Madras Government officials do not consider any tactics too low to persecute this organ of the people which exposes the official follies and attacks the wrong actions of the Government. In spite of the displeasure of the Forest College Principal we will go on with our work."

The Hindu, of the 29th June, remarks:—"We published a letter yesterday in which a correspondent complained that copies of New India were not available for purchase at railway stations. Messrs. Higginbothams have refused to take its copies for sale as stated by our contemporary, and as Messrs. Higginbothams are owners of the bookstalls in the principal railway stations, the travelling public are deprived of the benefit of reading New India. We cannot commend the spirit of so well-known a firm as Higginbothams in acting in the manner it is alleged to act. Political opinions and racial considerations are entirely out of place in business transactions, and we should be glad if members of the Anglo-Indian community would endeavour to keep their heads cool and not act under hasty impulses and momentary excitement at the present time. What seems to be an incredible piece of information has reached us just now from New India office that the Principal of the Forest College at Coimbatore refuses to issue a ticket of admission to the representative of New India, for the function of prize distribution performed by His Excellency the Governor to-day. The news is, as we have said, so difficult to believe, and is so serious that we shall await further particulars before commenting upon the same."

HINDU, Madras, June 29th, 1916.

12. In an article under this heading, New India, of the 29th June, writes:—"It is a well-known fact that in India we live hemmed in on all sides by repressive measures. The Press Act, the Seditious Meetings Act, the Official Secrets Act, the Defence of India Act, not to mention several despotic measures of early days—potential of mischief and capable of retarding democratic progress—are all there in the hands of a powerful bureaucracy to be used as it thinks fit. That time and again they have been made use of we are all aware; we also know how they tend to terrify people and make them behave as if their very souls were not their own. These iniquitous measures in the hands of people with vested interests of their own, naturally assume a shape and a form all too ghastly for the children of the soil and day and night, exert a baneful influence over them engendering at once fear and hatred. . . . . As if the Prussianism already woven in the fabric of the Indian administration is not enough, Englishmen belonging to the Anglo-Indian caste rigidly go after more repressive acts. The war has brought the Defence Act into being and all know to what use it is being put. Censorship was introduced and who is not aware by now of the prerogatives it has bestowed on the Indian public! . . . . One has to ask where is the trust which the changed angle of vision is said to have brought into being?

NEW INDIA, Madras, June 29th, 1916.

In these times of war, when Great Britain is fighting its battle of life, and when its very position in the European world is threatened, in this vast land there is peace and quiet; there has not been a single riot or disturbance; save for the few cases of anarchy, the country is going on with her business as usual; 300,000 of her sons are fighthing the Empire's battle and yet the Anglo-Indians want repressive measures! When the mother country is waging war against Prussianism, are her sons in this land to fall a prey to it?"

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, June 29th, 1916.

A commotion in Calicut.

13. The West Coast Spectator, of the 29th June, observes:—"A deal of commotion was caused in the bazaars yesterday, especially among the Mopla unwashed. It was announced by beat of tom tom that pilgrimage to Mecca was prohibited. ഹജ്ജിന പോവാൻ പാടില്ല എന്ന ഗവമ്മേണ്ട കല്പിച്ചിരിക്കുന്നു. These were the actual words used by the flunky who was accompanying the town crier. Now those who know Malayalam know how significant the statement is. The illiterate are liable to resent the command herein implied and to draw their own conclusions. . . . . Had the town crier explained the situation in Mecca and announced that there was no order implied in his statement but a friendly warning to intending pilgrims conveying the situation in the holy land and the perils a journey at this time entail, there would have been no room whatever for commotion or rumours. The Indian bazaar, it must be noted, is a place of 'rumours' where news is systematically involuted and twisted, of course, with no bad motives and where mischief and panic-mongers thrive. The authorities would have done well had they simply printed a translation of the press note of the Government of India and circulated it broadcast."

New India, Madras, June 30th, 1916.

Inhumanity.

14. New India, of the 30th June, remarks:—"A carter was beating his bullocks unmercifully with a billet of wood that was a formidable enough weapon to brain a man with, and certainly quite capable of injuring severely the poor beasts he was belabouring.' The correspondent of a Bombay paper, instead of calling a policeman, belaboured the carter with the same weapon. The Madras Mail approves, 'thinking that for senseless brutality there is no better treatment.' So 'inhuman cruelty' to a bullock is rightly inflicted on a man! Curious morals. And suppose a bigger man had beaten the correspondent for his inhuman cruelty? Apart from ethical considerations, does not the letter excite hatred and contempt of a class of His Majesty's subjects, to wit, carters, à la Warwick? Here is a case for a warning under the Press Act, similar to the first and only one received by New India."

Hindu, Madras, June 30th, 1916.

Village panchayats.

15. The Hindu, of the 30th June, has the following:—"The promised publication of a prècis of papers on the subject of the organisation of village panchayats in the Presidency of Madras has now been made. . . . . The Government order containing the prècis is a document of 51 pages and the summary of views is not as full and informing as desirable. A list of gentlemen consulted could usefully have been included in the Government order, so that the public may be left to judge of the qualifications of witnesses to be consulted on the points involved. The prècis of opinions of Collectors carefully suppresses the names of Collectors whose views are, however, copiously quoted especially when they are of a reactionary kind. The opinions of the Board of Revenue again are not fully given. In a discussion of an important subject such as the institution of village panchayats, the fullest possible information should be given to the public. Nervousness as to the feeling which will be created by the publication of views which are either strongly expressed, or are of a kind which will arouse indignation, is entirely out of place and prevents the public from forming their own conclusions as to the character and capacity of the officers concerned. Moreover, it is unjust to the people that officers should be allowed to write as they please of them, in the security of secrecy extended to such papers by the authorities. . . . . Undue prominence is given to the views of a Collector—whose name, however, is not given—who says that the establishments of panchayats would mean the abandonment of one of the cardinal principles of British rule in India, namely, the protection of the lower classes and amelioration of their lot. This is a calumnious statement, and we fancy it proceeds really from an apprehension that these village panchyats will evolve into political organisations menacing the existence of British rule in India. . . . . The Board of Revenue is stated to be opposed to the system of panchayats. It suggests that it will lead to the domination and exploitation of the labouring classes by the higher castes. The Board is also opposed to permanent benches for the trial of civil and criminal cases. These views of the Board will scarcely cause any surprise."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, June 30th, 1916.

Writing on this subject the Indian Patriot, of the 30th June, says:— "The publication of what is described as a précis of the papers on the village panchayats places before the public the opinion of some officials on the important question of panchayats. That the popular mind is deeply set upon this subject is by this time familiar to even the most isolated official. . . . . The cry for the panchayat is not a fashionable cry for more responsible participation in the administrative machinery. The panchayats have come to be looked upon as an absolute necessity. If the people should be saved from ruin and poverty, the village court which dispenses cheap and prompt justice must be developed. . . . . Official opinion on the panchayats, on the whole, cannot be described as a total opposition to it. All the Collectors except three are generally in favour of the introduction of the panchayats. All consider that it should be introduced gradually and cautiously. . . . . The danger of faction is a reality; but there must be no exaggeration on the official side of the difficulties. . . . . We are amused at some of the difficulties raised by Collectors and by the depressed classes who seem to have the same angle of vision as Collectors. It is, of course, to be regretted that the lower castes should dread the introduction of the panchayat. . . . . The higher castes, we have no doubt, would most strongly regret that such a feeling exists. It is not yet late to erase this out from them by sympathetic concern for them. The higher castes should not only get over that indifference and contempt for them, but must show that they are friends to them, real brethren, all working forward to a common goal."

His Excellency the Governor of Bombay and political controversy.

16. Writing under the heading "a tiresome appeal, the Indian Patriot, of the 1st July, says:—"Lord Willingdon took advantage of the Sardars' Darbar to address, we believe, a larger audience through the one he was directly addressing, about the political truce of which, we must frankly confess, we have been hearing too much. . . . . The appeal was unnecessary to those who heard it, and for those for whom it was meant, it is absolutely of no avail. We wish that this nonsense about controversies will be unheard. It is all right in England or America, but it is nothing but a meaningless echo here. . . . . We have instances in which the officials who have been the loudest for a political truce have not hesitated to embark upon highly controversial measures. . . . . We could understand this nervousness for controversy if controversies are known to have any effect upon the average official. He has been, however, hitherto content with the belief that he alone represents the masses, and that the voice of the educated is the voice of a selfish gang of Prussians to exercise absolute sway over the ignorant, the poor and the down-trodden. From this paradise the official has been observing the speeches and writings of the educated classes with subdued smile. Are we to understand that the official has descended from the paradise and that public opinion has begun to count? Give us this assurance and not a word of controversy will escape the politician. . . . . No such assurance is coming. The official seems more to be anxious that the outsider shall believe about India being unconcerned with anything about the war, and that to India the war is as much a dread reality as to England. This is not so. There is no meaning in this constant appeals about truce in politics from officials whose boast is that they know what is good for the people more than the people themselves. It only gives, on the other hand, a fresh grievance to the people: 'The official gags us by asking us to be silent when they trample upon us.'"

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, June 22nd, 1916.

17. The Hindu Nesan, of the 22nd June, is stunned by the news that there is every prospect of a war between the United States and Mexico, and thinks that this war, if it begins, will immediately affect the British, as it will tell upon the supply of implements of war for a large quantity of which Britain is now depending on the United States.

Yet another war.

Swadesamitran, Madras, June 24th, 1916.

18. The Swadesamitran, of the 24th June, expresses its satisfaction at the capture of Cernovitz by the Russians and observes:—This is a very important victory for the Russians. If they succeed in capturing the banks of the river running to the west of this town, they would have opened the route to the Carpathians, which will greatly endanger the position of the Austrians. But the capture of the banks of this river cannot be accomplished easily. The Russians can hope to advance upon the Carpathians only if they get a control over Galicia and this again depends upon their capturing Lemberg. But before Lemberg can be approached, they will have to capture the Kovel Railway station, which is now serving a useful purpose for the enemy, as it makes it possible for the Austrian and German forces to help each other, by means of the numerous lines running from it. This is now being attacked by the Russians, and we may count upon its capture, as the Austrians have been losing heavily of late and cannot therefore be expected to defend it for a long time. Then Lemberg will be in real danger.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, June 26th, 1916.

19. The Andhrapatrika, of the 26th June, says:—The strength of the Austrians has been curbed, and that of the Turks, annihilated. The vigour of German prowess has been reduced, and it is now certain that it is impossible for the Germans to win the war. It cannot be said that the Allies have gained the victory merely because the Germans have not met with success. The Allies have to retake the country now occupied by the Germans in the western theatre. As stated by Mr. Churchill in the Parliament, it is necessary to take the army now in reserve, and to act on the offensive in the western as in the eastern theatre. Unless this is done, there can be no hope that the war will terminate soon.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, June 24th, 1916.

20. Referring to the Paris Economic Conference, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 24th June, writes:—Some are for severing all relations with Germany. Others say that this is impossible. Germany has invested crores of wealth in South America, Sweden, Spain, Norway and other countries in order to promote her trade and industries. Germany and Austria are far ahead of other nations in the matter of industries. The conference was thus trying to arrive at a definite policy for the future. It seems to have been finally decided that the prime duty consists in making every effort to crush Germany altogether. This will be conceded on all hands. India has a population of more than 300 millions which admits of an organisation to train the people in all branches of trade and industries so as to preclude the possibility of all export of German and Austrian goods either into India, the allied countries or their colonies. If Germany should be vanquished in the meantime, the territories which they have conquered till now will have to be restored and in that case the policy then determined by the circumstances at the time and that policy will assuredly be conducive to the economic progress of the whole world. Whatever that may be, it seems to us that the Allies would do well to direct their attention wholly to the work of crushing Germany instead of labouring now over economic problems.

21. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 22nd June, publishes an account of the naval battle off Jutland and the remarks of an American expert and observes:—"As we have already stated we can with confidence repeat that no country in the world is able to stand before the British Empire nor can any surpass it in naval power."

A great naval battle: Britain's brilliant victory.

22. The Quami Report, of the 26th June in a leader, writes:—The famous French historian M. Le Bon in his monumental history of "the civilisation of the Arabs" writes:—It may be said that among all the civilised countries of the world Arabia is the only land, the greater part of which has escaped the foreign yoke. This statement still holds good, and no one can reveal to us the hidden constituents of this revolt in the Arabian desert.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, June 26th, 1916.

The tumult of the rising in the desert of Arabia.

It was in the fourth century B.C. that the sandy waste of Arabia first came under the observation of Alexander, but he died soon afterwards. Later King Antigon gave his son, Demetris, this problem to solve but the Arabs sent him this message:—"Why do you fight against us? We are the inhabitants of a desert where the things required by people living in towns are not obtainable." Early in the Christian era King Augustus (of 84 A.D.) invaded Yemen, but without the slightest success. Although with the aid of the histories of the world we are unable to say how many times Arabia has been invaded or what the details of these invasions were. Still we know, according to M. Le Bon, no invasion of Arabia has ever proved successful.

There is, of course, the memorable invasion of Mecca by Abraha, the King of Abyssinia, before the advent of the Holy Prophet upon whom be blessings and peace! and which is referred to in Korān, cv.! "Hast thou not seen how thy Lord dealt with the masters of the elephant?"

The original inhabitants of Arabia known as Bedawins are few in number and include common Arabs, Egyptians, Abyssinians, Africans, Berbers, the dwellers of Mesopotamia, etc. To call them Arabs would be as ridiculous as to denominate Parsis and Muhammadans in India, Indians.

The Arab's natural love of liberty, which he imbibes with his mother's milk, explains why Germans, Romans, and Persians have never been able to conquer him for long and even this is only made possible by inter-tribal dissensions.

The historian David says:—"These people have never been vanquished." According to Herodotus when Persia was in receipt of tribute from Phœnicia and Palestine, Arabia was exempted.

But these Arab tribes have not remained stationary. The Arabs, though they still possess this ardent desire for freedom, are much influenced from outside. Amazing changes have taken place in their dwellings, in their coffee-houses and in their ideas, and during the last few years they have become more amenable to authority. The real reason of the success of the Turks over the Arabs is due not to Turkish valour but to Arab weakness.

The Arabs have lost their national enthusiasm since the Oosmanli Khalifas took possession of their country. The powerful Islamic fraternity reconciled them to the Turks and to their changed condition. They knew that the surrounding powers would not leave them alive. (To be continued.)

The Qaumi Report, of the 27th June, writes:—There is no doubt that the Arabs are naturally keen on independence and freedom. Besides they have manifested a genius for government. In the year 1517, however, when the Turks took possession of Egypt, the Khalifate passed into the hands of this new people. The notion of some persons, that it was the Turks who redneed the Arab power, is erroneous. The fact is that, during the heroic period of the Oottomans, the Arabs were dissipating their energies in domestic strife in Spain and Africa. The Turks were undoubtedly precipitate, but their precipitancy benefited the Arabs who, although they had lost Spain, did not cease to rule in the Arabian desert, while the Sharif continued to be selected from their tribes.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, June 27th, 1916.

"The tumult of the revolt in the desert of Arabia."

At present our esteemed contemporaries the Madras Mail, the Times and the Statesman (Calcutta) are labouring under a delusion with reference to the Sharif of Mecca. They think that this move on his part will prove beneficial to the Arabs and, consequently, the pilgrimage to the Hedjaz will be less restricted. It is a pity they have not been able to understand the Arab affair as we comprehended the Irish problem.

As the Sharif was connected with the Holy Land of Mecca and Medina, he was respected and revered by the whole Islamic world. Originally, the Sharif was a mighty power. For the better understanding as to whose hands wielded administrative power we should bear in mind the words of Monsieur Le Bon, "The Arab system of government is simple. The Khalifa is God's representative on the earth. All spiritual, material and military power is vested in him and all the peoples subject to his authority are equal?

We can plainly state here that, up to the end of Abbaside rule, the Arabs developed no clan fanaticism. One reason for this was that the Khalifas were of Arab descent and, for the Arabman in the street this was sufficient.

The editor, in throwing further light on Arab history, adds:—"There is no doubt that the Arabs have prior rights to sovereignty as well as the Khalifate. They are the fountain head of the Mussalmans and the source of Islam. The Prophet (on whom be peace and blessings) foretold that dissensions among the Arabs would certainly occur.

The authentic books of tradition contain revealed predictions by the Prophet (may my life be sacrificed for him) regarding Nejd, Syria, Yemen and Basra.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, June 21st, 1916.

Dacoity in the Trichinopoly district.

23. Referring to a case of dacoity near Perambalur in the Trichinopoly district, the Andhraprakasika, of the 21st June, says:—It would appear that the Police failed to go to the scene of occurrence for three days after the commission of the offence. What is the reason for this? Did not the munsif and the karnam concerned send information to the Police? Granting that they fled from the village out of fear, would the villagers have kept quiet for three days?

Andhrachandrika, Proddatur, June 22nd, 1916.

The Madras University.

24. The Andhrachandrika, of the 22nd June, has some verses under the heading the "Wailings of a student" in the course of which the student says:—O, University! Can you tell me what good you are doing? I do not see any. You are a demon. The swords of your sister institutions are not so sharp as yours. Is it just on your part to worry us while the Anglo-Indians praise you?

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, June 30th, 1916.

The Madras School Final examination.

25. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 30th June, writes:—The candidates for the Madras School Final examination are suffering great injustice at the hands of the examiners. Even the most diligent students find it difficult to get through the examination. In the Universities in India, 50 to 75 per cent of the candidates are successful. In the Madras School Final examination last year only 25 per cent passed. Seventy-four per cent had appeared for the examination. We are quite unable to discover the reason for this state of things. It is impossible to ascribe it to the students. There cannot be more than 25 per cent who may be said to be well-to-do and therefore indifferent to their studies. In the Calcutta and other Universities 70 to 80 per cent of the candidates come out successful. This is admittedly quite satisfactory. In the Bombay University, 50 per cent are able to get through. There is no room for complaint here too. But the Madras results are exceedingly bad. In the Intermediate examination, too, there has been heavy slaughter. Some of the students of our province are appearing for the examinations of the Madras University. The majority of them are of a most diligent order. Even among these, as many as 74 per cent have failed. It behoves the Government to ascertain and remove the cause of such bad results. The methods of the School Final authorities have become quite notorious. We hope that this notoriety will be removed before long.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, July 3rd, 1916.

Arabic Professorship in the Presidency College.

26. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 3rd July, publishes a communication in which the writer thanks the Government for creating an Arabic Professorship in the Presidency College, and expresses the hope that the Government will select a scholar who, in addition to being a graduate in English, is thoroughly acquainted with Arabic and is able to speak the language fluently. It is suggested that it would be advisable to hold a competitive examination and select a candidate on the result.

Before a highly qualified man is appointed, he suggests that Moulavi Mir Hyder Ali Sahib should be appointed to act. The Moulavi Sahib is said to hold a Moulavi's diploma to speak the language with facility that he is both respectable and experienced. He also knows English. It is hoped that this acting appointment may be made in order to afford ample time and opportunity for making the final selection.

Public health in India.

27. Referring to the annual report for 1913–14 on the administration of the Department of Public Health, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 27th June, writes:—Although no satisfactory reason has been given to explain why there has been such enormous delay in publishing the report, we are glad to say that the report contains some very instructive and useful information regarding the high rate of infant mortality in India when compared with that of European countries and the mode of preventing it. We would suggest that the information contained therein regarding the preservation of health may very usefully be published in the form of pamphlets and distributed broadcast among the people. We hope that the Governments of the various provinces will devote their earnest attention to the subject.

28. Referring to the closing of the gate leading from the Calicut railway station to Tali and Chalappuram, which has caused not a little inconvenience and hardship to the people, especially to the third-class passengers, with whose money the railway company grow rich day by day, the Manorama, of the 27th June, asks whether they would have done so if the residents in those places were Europeans, and hopes that the matter will receive the attention of the authorities concerned in the near feature.

Sugarcane cultivation.

29. The Janopakari,* of May, dwells upon the causes for this industry not improving in this country, and suggests that the Government should start demonstration factories in some places to teach the people the method of extracting the juice from sugarcane and convert it into jaggery by means of machines.

30. The Swadesamitran, of the 21st June, reproduces the substance of the views of Mr. Horniman, the Editor of the Bombay Chronicle, on the deleterious effects of the Press Act and the extraordinary powers it gives to the Police and the magistracy, and implores Lord Chelmsford to listen

31. In commenting upon the administration report of this department for 1915, the Swadesamitran, of the 22nd June, refers to the profit of Rs. 9,00,000 earned by this department last year, and suggests that this surplus may be utilised in increasing the scale of salary of the subordinate staff and on reducing the scale of registration fees.

32. Referring to certain proposals under the consideration of the Government for regulating the supply of water for purposes of irrigation so as to prevent its wastage, the Swadesamitran, of the 23rd June, suggests the publication of these proposals in the vernaculars, so that the agriculturists, who are directly affected by them, may understand them and give their opinion on the matter, and adds that the opinion of the agriculturists is more important in this matter than that of experts, who may not be aware of the peculiar conditions of this country.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 22nd, 1916.

33. Referring to some cases of death due to sunstroke that occurred among English soldiers on their way from Karachi to Rawalpindi, the Andhrapatrika, of the 22nd June, says:—The authorities have to learn one thing from this. They should, as far as possible, avoid bringing soldiers to India who cannot bear her tropical heat. They have to enlist a greater number of Indians in the army and enable them to defend their country by giving them the required training.

An Indian army.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 24th, 1916.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 24th June, says:—If, without making any difference, the rulers raise an Indian army, competent men from all sections of the people of India will come forward in defence of the empire. Indians, poor as they are, will then not hesitate to meet the military expenditure for the time being for the benefit of the empire. The appointment of a Military officer as Viceroy, the determination to raise a Brahman regiment in the Mahratta country, and the unprecedented references in the House of Lords to the question of raising an Indian army, raise in us the hope that the expectations which we gave expression to while welcoming Lord Chelmsford will be fulfilled.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 24th, 1916.

In commenting on the speech of Mr. Churchill on India in the House of Commons, the Andhraprakasika, of the 24th June, says:—The Indians have from the very beginning been asking why the authorities should resort to compulsory recruitment in England instead of raising a large army in India. It is unfortunate that the rulers have not heeded this request. If the same facilities are afforded to Indian soldiers as to Europeans, it will be very easy in this country to form a large army of Indians. May the rulers at least now follow the suggestion of Mr. Churchill?

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 23rd, 1916.

34. Referring to the election of Bombay members for His Excellency the Viceroy's Council, the Andhrapatrika, of the 23rd June, says:—We do not say that Mr. Jinnah and Sir Ebrahim Rahimtulla are not Indian representatives, or that they will not deal with Indian questions as Indians. But we must point out the absence of fair-play in the present methods of election. It is deplorable that not even one of the three members going from Bombay is a Hindu. The Muhammadan members of the Bombay Legislative Council enjoy the right not only to elect their separate representative, but also to elect along with the other members, two other representatives. It is ridiculous that while two representatives of Muhammadans, who have been given separate representation on the ground of their forming a minority, have been elected, there is not even one to represent the Hindus, who form the majority of the population. The Muhammadan members who voted for a separate Muhammadan representative ought not to have been iucluded among the electors of the other two members for the Viceroy's Council. We trust the rulers will amend the present regulations and obviate the unfairness of the present methods. We also hope that His Excellency the Viceroy will nominate Mr. Setalvad as a member of his Council, and enable him to continue and finish the work he has already begun

35. The Sasilekha, of the 23rd June, reports Dr. Gilbert Slater to have said thus:—The Civilian officers could arrange to put down famine and pestilence but could not uplift the Indians. To do the latter work, some great officers have to be sent for from Japan and America and given high appointments in India.

Civilian officers.

SASILEKHA, Madras, June 23rd, 1916.

36. The Kistnapatrika, of the 17th June, publishes, under this title, the Telugu version of a lecture delivered by Mr. B. G. Tilak at Ahmednagar on the 1st June, in which occur the following observations:—Swaraj is our right, our birth-right. It is our national duty to strive for the attainment of Swaraj. The Indians must see that mere knowledge without power is useless. We are in every way the equals of our rulers in knowledge; but they have the governing authority and we have it not. Where there are equal opportunities we have proved ourselves their equals. We have power and capacity, but are under the influence of a misconception that we are weak. Swaraj is the gateway to all prosperity; but some among ourselves, not realising this, obstruct our progress. A desire for swaraj does not involve the idea of driving away the Englishmen from this country. We are aspiring for swaraj under the suzerainty of the King-Emperor. . . . . The advocates of such a swaraj are no seditionists. They are loyal subjects, pure and sincere. . . . . People in other countries are enjoying swaraj and we also want it. Government servants are now our masters. They must be but our servants. We have implored the Government officers in various ways, but all in vain, for having the arrack shops in Goda closed. We do not want a bureaucracy that sets at naught our clear wishes and wield an arbitrary sway over us. It is cattle that are arbitrarily governed. We will not consent to be governed like slaves. Such slavish methods have stamped out our self-reliance. . . . . Some Englishmen say that the Government obtaining in Native States is more beneficial to the subjects than that obtaining in British India.

Swaraj, our right.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, June 17th, 1916.

37. In an article eulogising Mrs. Besant and her political propaganda, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 23rd June, writes:—Although her methods are being decried by narrow-minded officials, it seems to us that in order to foster the good-will between the British and the Indians the only useful political methods are those advocated by Mrs. Besant. If the Indians should remain sincerely loyal to the British, they should be given the same rights and privileges as are enjoyed by the British. India should be granted Home Rule. The British Parliament should contain at least a hundred Indian representatives. The House of Lords should contain at least a hundred of our Indian Chiefs. In India, too, there should be parliamentary bodies of the Commons and of the Lords. These bodies should exercise an efficient control over the administration of the country. Our representatives in the British Parliament should have a voice in the affairs of the empire. These are the privileges which Mrs. Besant demands and the British are unwilling to grant. If there should be four or five Indians of the same patriotic ardour as Mrs. Besant, India's expectations will be sure to be fulfilled. Mrs. Besant even single-handed is doing extraordinary things. We pray that India may have many children of the type of Mrs. Besant, that their greatness may be such as to enable them to perform the obsequies of bureaucratism in India, that Mrs. Besant may act as the presiding minister at this ceremony and that India may produce patriotic citizens that will regard the securing of a just administration for India as the end and aim of their existence.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, June 21st, 1916.

New India and the Press Act.

38. The Kerala Sanchari, of the 21st June, again condemns the demanding of security by Government from Mrs. Besant and the continuance in force of the Press Act, and observes that it is high time that the Government did put a stop to the high-handed manner in which the Act is enforced, and that it is to be hoped that the Government will do the needful in the matter.

NAZRANI DEEPIKA, Mannanam, June 27th, 1916.

New India security case.

Referring to New India controversy, the Nazrani Deepika, of the 27th June, points out that, inasmuch as the Government did no harm to the Congress or its leaders during the last thirty years, and as on certain occasions Government officials even helped and co-operated with its leaders, it may reasonably be inferred that the demand of security from the editor of New India was due to the fact that the tone and tenor of its articles were objectionable in the present state of things, and observes that, though freedom of the press is a desirable thing, there must be a limit to their criticisms of the acts of the Government.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA. Mysore, June 30th, 1916.

India and the Empire.

39. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 30th June, writes :—The population of the whole of the British Empire is 434 millions, of which the Indian population alone is 315 millions. It is thus easy to see the importance of the relations between India and the empire. Nevertheless, some people are very reluctant to concede the claims of Indians to the rights of British citizenship. In the present war the Indians have offered their all including their very lives in the cause of the empire. If the Indians should, without exception, be sincerely loyal to the British, it is imperative that they should be granted the privileges which their loyalty merits. The British are champions of constitutional methods. In the colonies too these methods have been fairly established. It is this rigid adherence to constitutional methods that accounts for such complete unity in the present crisis. The permanence of the empire is based entirely on the traditions of British justice. So long as the British authorities are mindful of this fact, no harm can ever come to the empire.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, June 21st, 1916.

The division of Malabar and the memorial of the people of the Kasaragod taluk.

40. Referring to the memorial submitted to the Government by the people of the Kasaragod taluk protesting against its being joined to the district of North Malabar, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 21st June, tries to refute the arguments advanced therein against the proposed measure. According to the paper, the customs and habits of the people of that taluk, the majority of whom are Malayalis, are similar to those of the people of Malabar. It understands that most of the Malayali janmis therein have relations in Malabar, and thinks therefore that the step will be conducive to the welfare of the people as well as to administrative efficiency, the memorial itself being the result of obstinacy on the part of some of the influential Canarese-speaking people of the taluk. It hopes that the Government will be graciously pleased to consider all these facts before they come to any decision on the matter. In this connection it also observes that the Government will do well to read carefully once again the letters of the then Collector of South Canara, Mr. Wood, and of the District Munsif of Kasaragod, Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar, written at the time when by order of Government Malayalam was made the Court language of the taluk.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, June 21st, 1916.

The Maharaja of Travancore and the Madras Government.

41. Referring to the purchase of a bungalow in Coonoor by His Highness the Maharaja of Travancore, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 21st June, expresses regret at the decision arrived at by the Madras Government on the subject.

Writing on the same subject, the Keraleyabhimani, of the 21st June, also condemns the decision of the Madras Government, and hopes that they will reconsider their decision or that the Government of India will interfere in case the former fail to do so.

KERALEYABHIMANI, Mavelikkara, June 21st, 1916.

III.—LEGISLATION.

Native Chiefs in Legislative Councils.

42. Referring to the provision in the Bill to amend the India Consolidation Act that Native Princes and their subjects can become Members of the Legislative Councils in India, the Swadesamitran, of the 20th June, says:—It is an admitted fact in western countries that Legislative Councils should be fully representative in character and the House of Commons, which is the Legislative Council in Britain, is really so. But as the Indians do not enjoy the same liberty as the British, a number of officials are nominated to these councils in India to support the Government. This, in effect, prevents the popular voice having a predominating influence in the Councils, and therefore the Indians have been demanding the curtailment of the number of officials therein. Such being the case, we cannot understand the rationale of allowing Native Princes to get into the Legislative Council. They cannot be said to be the representatives of the people. There is no connection whatever between them and the British subjects. No subject affecting their territories are discussed in the Legislative Council, and so they cannot be said to represent even their own subjects. It may be stated that they are brought into the Council to be expert advisers to Government. But they cannot be so as they are not better than the officials and the people in British India, either in administrative capacity or legal knowledge. So it is clear that the presence of the Native Princes is unnecessary in these councils. Let us see if any advantage can be derived by their being in them. As they cannot be expected to have much sympathy for the aspirations and rights of British Indian subjects, their presence in the Council cannot benefit the latter in any way. On the other hand, it may not be in the interests of these Princes to speak for the people against the views of the officials, for, though nominally they are the Allies of the British Government, they have practically to bow to the Government of India or the Provincial Governments. So they cannot plead for the British subjects and they will not do so. The influence of the popular representatives in the Council will, therefore, be weakened by these Princes getting into it. When the public demand that the voice of the representative members should have a predominating influence in the Legislative Councils, it is undesirable to introduce into them persons who cannot have any idea of the interests of the people and who will have to play to the tune of the Government. If this provision in the Bill is approved, it would set back the clock of progress in India, while every other portion of the British Empire is progressing fast.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 20th, 1916.

The United Provinces Municipal Act.

43. The Swadesamitran, of the 21st June, writes:—It appears the Viceroy has approved of the amendment of this Act so as to allow the Muhammadans to have some seats for them exclusively in the municipalities in this Province. Class representation may not always be beneficial. On the other hand, it may tell upon the amity between different classes. There is much of dissatisfaction in the United Provinces on account of this amendment. The Viceroy would have done well to have ascertained the public opinion on this subject before giving his consent to the amendment.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 21st, 1916.

The Press Act.

44. In its leader on the Indian Press Act, the Andhrapatrika, of the 22nd June, says:—The Government were unusually precipitate and suspended all ordinary procedure in enacting the Press Act of 1910. Everyone knows the difficulties that have resulted from it. The object of the legislators was one thing and the result of the legislation when that was put into operation has been quite another. New India press is not a new press, nor New India a new paper. Whatever may be the grounds on which that paper was first exempted from payment of security, the subsequent order of the Presidency Magistrate is illegal. The operation of the Press Act is in every way opposed to justice, and we hope that the evil consequences that have flowed from it may be remedied.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 22nd, 1916.

The same paper reports the editor of the Bombay Chronicle to have said thus:—I have been carefully reading New India ever since it was started. I may not agree with that paper on some points and in the manner in which those points are urged. But that does not warrant me to say that that paper has transgressed the law. I emphatically assert that the operation of the Press Act has been very stringent and injurious, and that the freedom of the press is illusory so long as this Act remains in the Statute Book. I am prepared to prove this if anybody ventures to question its truth. The Act is a veritable source of trouble to many a newspaper conductor. The assurance of the Government that the Act will not be abused in its operation has like many other assurances of theirs turned out to be false. The Act has to be repealed at least for maintaining the fair name of the British Government.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 21st, 1916.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 21st June, says:—When an Indian writes that it is unjust on the part of Europeans to write so and so, he is charged with exciting racial animosity under the Press Act. But when English papers say that as soon as the Arms Act is repealed, the Indians will turn out disloyal and rise in revolt, the writers are not so charged. This is unfair. The Press Act is an obstacle thrown in the way of the progress of national life. But it is impossible to retard this progress. We hope that the Government will either repeal the Act or amend it.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, June 17th, 1916.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 17th June, in a leader headed the Press Act, observes:—This repressive measure that is now agitating this country was enacted in 1910. In 1910 the Indian political atmosphere was much agitated. Bengalee papers like the Yuganter and the Sandhya were rousing the spirit of the people and hand bills inciting them to the murder of the white people were freely circulated. The Bengalee youths were starting secret societies, and manufacturing weapons of destruction such as bombs. There was a clean cleavage between "swadesh" and "videsh" that was filling the hearts of people with a certain enthusiasm. It was no wonder that the rulers lost their equillibrium under such circumstances. They saw that meetings and journals were the means for such agitation and enacted laws whereby they could bring these two under their control. They suppressed organisations that were leading Bengalee youths to lawless acts. They deported some great men who had a hold on these young minds. They stopped mass meetings. . . . . We cannot realise the emergency that called into existence the Press Act, unless we recall to our minds the conditions above detailed. . . . . The rulers thought that the remedy for all these evils was to place the press entirely at the mercy of the magistrates, by introducing, with necessary modifications, into India a system of control existing in Austria. . . . . Sir P. Sinha was then the Legislative Member in the council of Lord Hardinge and with the aid of his statesmanship this measure was enacted, whereby the District Magistrate was constituted the presiding deity over the press. He may demand a security of Rs. 5,000 from the proprietor of any paper, should he find any article therein objectionable; and what is the criterion for deciding upon the objectionable character of a paper? It is the sole and independent judgment of the magistrate, his own conscience. An article may be objectionable if it criticises the administrative policy of Government officials, ... or if it contains anything adverse to the people in the colonies. There is no knowing which criticism is objectionable. The proprietors of papers have to conduct themselves in obedience to the sweet will of the authorities. If the magistrate takes offence, a security must be deposited and there is no knowing for writing what article. The magistrate is not bound to give reasons, and there is no right of appeal. . . . . No more need be said about the repressive character of this measure, which cannot be properly called a law. It is a weapon forged by the Government to be used arbitrarily. . . . . The representatives of the people, when they accorded their consent to this measure, believed the promises held out that this Act would be used only against writings that incited people to sedition. It is said Mr. Mazrul Haque tore up his protest on the strength of the assurances which converted an honourable member like Gokhale. The Bill became an Act. Magistrates were invested with new powers. The press was placed at their mercy. They demanded security without assigning reasons. Their demands were in some cases preceded by warnings, while in others they descended abruptly like thunderbolts. . . . . Many a paper has become a victim of this Act. . . . . Did they preach anarchy? Did they incite people to sedition or revolt? If they did not why should this weapon be hurled against them? What has become of the assurances given in the Imperial Legislative Council? What are our leaders doing to counteract these repressive Acts of the Government? Had even Sir P. Sinha a word to say about this Act as president of the National Congress? Our leaders are entitled to our gratitude, now that they have come forward with their protests against the Act, by way of expressing their sympathy for Mrs. Annie Besant. . . . . We pray that the press may be once more brought under the control of the Courts of Justice, and saved from the arbitrary government of Magistrates. We remind the Government of the assurances they gave in the Imperial Legislative Council. We pray that confidence may be reposed in the people. It is only mutual confidence that strengthens cordial relations. Love developes only under freedom. Strength grows under love. An empire will be happy and abiding only when confidence, freedom, love and strength prevail therein.

The Press Act.

45. Adverting to the Indian Consolidation Bill introduced in Parliament, the Manorama, of the 23rd June, disapproves of its provision for the admission of Native Rulers into the Legislative Councils of British India, as it is merely calculated to increase the number of those who vote with the Government, even if the Native Rulers may find time to attend to British Indian politics.

The Indian Consolidation Bill.

MANORAMA, Calicut, June 23rd, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Kerala Patrika, of the 24th June, points out that the provision in the Bill which abolishes the right of the people to sue the Secretary of State is unnecessary and uncalled for, and that it will be taken exception to by Indians and Anglo-Indians alike. It, however, favours the provision which admits Native Rulers and their subjects into the Civil and Military services. Other changes proposed to be effected are, according to the paper, of no great consequence.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, June 24th, 1916.

In its leader on the Government of India Bill, the Desamata, of the 21st June, says:—Under the law as it now stands, the Indians have the right to sue the Secretary of State in cases in which suits were maintainable against the East India Company when India was under its government. The present Bill deprives the people of this right in some cases. Again, the present practice is for the Secretary of State to present the Indian financial statement every year between the 1st and the 14th May, and we do not see any reason why it is proposed in the present Bill to extend this period by a fortnight. The Secretary of State now obtains the assent of his council for every item of expenditure that he incurs. Under the present Bill he need not do it. Again the Bill deprives our Governor-General of some of his present rights. It enables the Government to appoint the rulers of Native States and their subjects as Members of Legislative Councils. This is highly undesirable in our opinion. It is to be regretted that opportunities have not been afforded to Indian political leaders to review the Bill before it was introduced in the Parliament.

The Government of India Bill.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, June 21st, 1916.

IV.—Native States.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, June 22nd, 1916.

46. The Andhrapatrika, of the 22nd June, concludes a leaderette on the Mysore University and Telugu, as follows:—It is neither far-sighted statesmanship nor fair-play to compel the Telugu-speaking public in the Mysore Province to learn Canarese instead of their mother tongue. The history of the world bears testimony to the fact that it is fraught with evil to use the force of authority for changing the mother tongue of a people. The Diwan of Mysore is an Andhra. We trust that the liberal-minded Government of Mysore will consider these matters and do justice.

The Mysore University.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, June 28th, 1916.

In commenting on the Mysore University, the Andhrapatrika, of the 28th June, says:—Taking all things into consideration, it will appear that the Mysore University is giving very little encouragement to the vernaculars. There is nothing new about the University. We suspect it has all the defects of the old Madras University and a few more.

Mysore Star, Mysore, June 25th, 1916.

47. The Mysore Star, of the 25th June, in it news columns, writes:—His Highness the Maharaja of Travancore wanted to obtain, for hire this year, the very bungalow which he was usually occupying for his summer residence at Ootacamund every year. There is a European club next to this bungalow. The residents of this club, not liking that the Maharaja with his suite should take up a residence as their neighbour, complained to the Madras Government and His Excellency the Governor wrote a letter to His Highness and thus prevented him from taking up this bungalow. While even in England the British authorities are trumpeting the loyalty and attachment of the rulers of the Native States to the British Raj, it is curious that their dignity should be made so cheap in their own country.

Vokkaligara Patrike, Bangalore, June 28th, 1916.

48. Referring to the annual report on the working of the agricultural banks in Mysore, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 28th June, observes:—It is evident that every effort was made during the year under review to remove the shortcomings that were noticed in previous years in regard to these institutions, and we regret to find that, despite these efforts, the affairs of these banks do not show any signs of prosperity. Of the 59 banks in the State, only two have been transacting business during the year and even these are becoming slack. Of the remaining 57, 4 have been dissolved; 13 have to pay debts to Government, and the rest have just succeeded in liquidating their debts. Of the amounts advanced by Government to these bodies Rs. 51,555 remains still distributed in the hands of thirteen societies. The Government ascribe these outstandings to the slackness on the part of the Revenue officers of Bangalore, Mysore and Kolar in demanding payment, and the Registrar of these banks observes that the outstandings are due to want of zeal and a proper sense of responsibility among the members. We would suggest that the only means of altering the present deplorable condition of these banks consists in converting them into co-operative societies, as the latter are not only seen to be working more satisfactorily, but hold out special facilities for repaying loans obtained for agricultural purposes.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, June 30th, 1916.

49. Commenting on the annual report on the administration of the Mysore Excise Department, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 30th June, says:—The net revenue of the Government during the year from this department amounted to Rs. 55,06,297. The income derived in the previous year was Rs. 52,04,308. The estimated revenue for the current year is Rs. 58,13,240. The Government themselves are loud in proclaiming that the drink evil should be checked, so as to prevent the crime that results from intemperance. At the same time, they would not give up the revenue derived from this source, and they therefore permit the manufacture of intoxicating drinks and provide facilities for their sale. India is not the only country that does this. The excise revenue of the United Kingdom in 1901 was £3,721,000. In 1913–14, it rose to £8,353,000. This shows that the evil is spreading everywhere in the world. In the Native States of Baroda and Travancore they have been following an excellent means of checking its growth during the last seven years If 60 per cent of the people of any part of a town object to the public house in their neighbourhood the public house is removed from that quarter. Under this device, the number of public houses during the last seven years has been reduced from 7,050 to 2,273. Even this method is not very effective. Unless the Government close their distilleries, prohibit all liquor trade, and punish those who are engaged in illicit manufacture it is impossible to eradicate the evil.

The Mysore University scheme.

50. Commenting on the Mysore University Bill, the Vrittanta Patrike, of the 29th June, says that while the work of the proposed University will commence from the 1st of July and new classes formed in accordance therewith, the Bill relating to the same has been published only in this week's Gazette and has yet to be discussed and passed by the Legislative Council. This commencement of work in anticipation of sanction, the paper remarks, not only implies an irregularity of procedure, but leaves the Legislative Council, on such a momentous question as this, very little opportunity or freedom of discussing the details of the measure before it. The paper adds that all this hurry could be avoided if the operation of the scheme were to be deferred till next year and that it would be unwise to pass the Bill as it is, without discussing it fully and leisurely.

VRITTANTA PATRIKE, Mysore, June 29th, 1916.

The Mysore Economic Conference.

51. The Bharata Kesari, of the 21st June, refers to the good work done by the Mysore Economic Conference, which, it hopes, will be a lesson to other Native States.

II.—Home Administration.

1. The West Coast Reformer, of the 2nd July, states:—"The Governor in Council has been pleased to make a large set of rules under the Indian Motor Vehicles Act of 1914 for regulating the use of motor cars and cycles in the Madras Presidency. . . . . The possession of a motor car, in view of this volume of rules, appears to be scarcely less irksome than the management of a public joint stock company duly registered."

2. New India, of the 4th July, writes:—"Mr. Fazlul Hasan of Aligarh, for 'disobeying the order of internment,' was disposed of by the District Magistrate. . . . . We think 'consecutively' must mean 'concurrently'. Two years' imprisonment for the trifling 'offences' of a man interned without trial would be incredible. Even eight months would be shocking, especially when we remember that the Defence of India Act is not needed as excuse, nor any peril of foreign invasion. The normal laws under which we live provide for internment without trial, and without any knowledge of any offence committed."

(d) Education.

3. In a leader under the heading "A grave scandal", the Hindu, of the 3rd July, writes:—"We understand that a requisition has been sent to the Registrar, University of Madras, according to the Regulations for the convening of an extraordinary meeting of the Senate in order to consider a motion of which due notice has been given, relating to the last Intermediate examination results. . . . . The results in the Intermediate examination, especially in recent years, have constituted a grave scandal which the self-respecting public cannot for a moment tolerate and which, had they the power, they will not hesitate to remove. The specious arguments and ingenious explanations which the orthodox English pandits, who now seem to run the University, used to defend the poor results in previous years had never any real force at all and they have now been proved to be absolutely baseless. . . . . There can, therefore, be only two causes for the singularly unique notoriety which the Madras University has earned for itself in the matter of results—the vagaries of examiners and the unnecessarily high standard fixed in Madras. As to the former, there appears to be no limit, and we have heard reports of instructions for correction and of the methods of correction adopted which in the interests of the prestige of the Madras University, we trust, are not true. The vagaries of Madras examiners, dominated as they are by a few powerful persons who have peculiar views of efficiency, have caused much misery and much suffering on the part of the innocent, and the Senate has not been able to control them, even if it should have desired to do so. . . . . Bare justice demands that as much reparation as is possible in the circumstances of the case should be done, and popular indignation can only be appeased by the Senate adopting a reasonable attitude, untrammelled by considerations of prestige or efficiency."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 4th, 1916.

4. The following appears in the West Coast Spectator of the 4th July:—

The Calicut Municipal Council.

"How we wish Mrs. Besant were present at last evening's meeting of the local self-rulers, ycleped the Calicut Municipal Council! We are sure that she would have, then, materially altered her views on Home Rule. They were to consider a most important subject, namely, the circular on female education. A special meeting was called, and seven councillors responded, five Indians and two Europeans. The discussion was tame and lifeless, only one member, an educationist, offering certain remarks."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 6th, 1916.

The West Coast Spectator, of the 6th July, remarks:—The Calicut Municipal Council have before them a proposal to close the new feeder road running parallel to the railway line between level crossings I and II to cart traffic. The reasons for this closure are not very clear. We suppose a deal of the rate-payers' money has been spent upon the road only for the benefit of the affluent who ride in motor cars and rubber-tyred carriages. The road joins the Court and Mananchira roads to the Big Bazaar road, and as such is of considerable importance to the mercantile community.

"In fact the construction of this road has created a diversion of traffic reducing 'cooly charges.' Roads are laid down in municipalities not for any particular class of traffic, but for the convenience and benefit of the rate-payer. Several buildings are springing up by the road, and we ask how the owners thereof and the residents of the locality are to convey building materials and other commodities if carts are proscribed? The proposal seems to us to be unwise, and we wonder how anybody could make it. If the proposal is to be accepted, we hope the Municipal Council will instal overhead pneumatic tubes for the transport of goods belonging to people induced to take residence in the locality by the construction of the road. We trust the majority of the Council will have the good sense to throw the proposal out unceremoniously."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 7th, 1916.

5. New India, of the 7th July, writes:—"The Corporation of Madras have wrought a pitiful destruction in one of our most beautiful avenues, Mowbray Road. The splendid trees have had their beauty destroyed, and now hold up mutilated arms in helpless protest against the Vandals who have destroyed their symmetry and leafy grace. It was a joy in the burning days of summer to drive into this cool and shady avenue, but now the eyes are outraged by the irreparable ruin that has been wrought. To destroy an old tree is a crime; the slow work of Nature through decades is ruined for fifty years in a few hours by the brutal and sacrilegious hands of men. Who gave the order for this ruthless destruction of old trees, carried out with a recklessness that increases the injury, and makes the great trees repulsive with ugliness? Mr. Molony is an Irishman. He never could have sanctioned such a crime against the Beautiful. . . . . The people who gave the order of destruction should be compelled to live in the most noisome of the Triplicane back-lanes."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 5th, 1916.

6. The Indian Patriot, of the 5th July, writes:—"A remarkable memorial has been addressed to His Excellency the Viceroy by a pattadar in the Tinnevelly district, which lets in day-light into the deeds of the minor Revenue officials. . . . . If the memorial would compel the higher authorities to enquire into the facilities which now exist for the Revenue subordinates to annoy the poor, the memorialist would have done much public service. We, sincerely, hope that the Government of Madras would read the memorial with a sense of the very heavy responsibility it has to protect the poor ryot from the prussianism that now prevails among the lower subordinates. . . . . If an educated pattadar has much to complain, what of the experiences of the illiterate millions who are accustomed to take every new development with fatal resignation? We expect the Government to make a severe example of the officials who invented this extra war taxation of so many rupees per so much land revenue. The Government never wanted it; and any one who is responsible for it has helped to make the Government unpopular. We have always held that the land revenue administration of the Government is responsible for nine-tenths of its unpopularity; and we are surprised that as if the encroachments, irregular irrigation and resettlement are not enough, original schemes of war taxation are invented without the knowledge of Government. The light that had now been thrown into the work of the Revenue subordinates deserves to be utilised for a thorough enquiry, not with a view to simply find out whether these allegations are true, but how the low level of humanity employed to deal with the ryots could be prevented from harassing the ignorant poor that, alas, form the majority of the population in India."

A ryot's grievances.

(g) Forests.

7. The West Coast Reformer, of the 7th July, observes:—"'All non-Indian students must join the Volunteers. Indian students will undergo a course of drill or physical training.' This is the last but certainly not the least of the rules of the Indian Forest Research Institute at Dehra Dun. A rule of racial discrimination could not be worded more tersely. Non-Indian students must bear arms and learn to fight, while Indian students ought not to do that, but be content with their own natural arms. . . . . It may be very useful to enquire why this unreasonable and injurious rule is introduced in the Imperial College of Forestry in India. Neither Indian nor Imperial interests are promoted by it. Of course the Forest Department in framing this rule has merely adopted the general policy of the Government, but a college where young officers of Indian and European races are trained for the same work is the worst place for sowing the seed of racial discrimination to the disadvantage of the indigenous race."

West Coast Reformer, Calicut, July 7th, 1916.

The Indian Forest Research Institute, Dehra Dun.

(h) Railways.

8. The West Coast Reformer, of the 7th July, writes:—"In a recent issue one of our correspondents brought to public notice an instance of the injustice done to third-class passengers in a crowded train by the reservation of three compartments for the accommodation of five Eurasians and thus putting Indian passengers to much unnecessary inconvenience. This is by no means an uncommon occurrence. The unjustly partial and favourite treatment given to Eurasian passengers is an evil prevailing in most railways managed by companies. . . . . Many Indian gentlemen are under the impression that such a reservation is justified, but it has been found to be quite unlawful and anyone may take advantage of the Sind Court's decision wherever there is occasion for it. A few suits by sufferers will bring the much-needed light to the railway servants who unduly oblige their Eurasian friends and cause inconvenience and heart-burning to third-class passengers in the ever-crowded trains."

West Coast Reformer, Calicut, July 7th, 1916.

9. The West Coast Spectator, of the 1st July, remarks:—"Speaking at Narsapur Mrs. Besant is reported to have 'assured the audience she would get Home Rule for India, for it was hers by right.' The italics are ours, and we have taken this passage from a message published in the Hindu. The statement is astonishing. Let us hope that the correspondent has misinterpreted Mrs. Besant, for, we cannot conceive of that lady speaking such nonsense. At any rate it is time her admirers, among whom the correspondent undoubtedly is, were not carried away by their enthusiasm into making extravagent statements."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 1st, 1916.

Mrs. Besant and Home Rule for India.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 1st, 1916.

10. The West Coast Spectator, of the 1st July, observes:—"A Northern contemporary publishes the interesting information that there is a conspiracy somewhere to 'elect' Mrs. Besant to the Presidentship of the forthcoming Congress. We have very great respect for the grand old lady, and we admire her sincerely. But we are not charmed with the proposal to put her in the chair. The Congress has not identified itself with her propaganda. That being the case, it would be better if she plays the part of an advocate and argues the Congress into conversion to her views, if it is possible."

Mrs. Besant and the Congress Presidentship.

New India, Madras, July 3rd, 1916.

11. The following appears in New India of the 3rd July:—"Several letters have reached us urging the election of Lala Lajpat Rai. That noble patriot is fully worthy of the presidential chair, but as it is not possible for him to come to India at present, of what use would it be to elect him President? When he is again among us, we have no doubt that he will be unanimously elected."

The Congress Presidentship.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 1st, 1916.

12. Writing under the heading "A confession of faith" the West Coast Spectator, of the 1st July, says:—"At the outset we must mention that we stand by Home Rule. We believe in a higher and nobler destiny that must be ours, and we also believe in the good intentions of the English nation. There may be discordant notes here and there, a Rees or a Curzon may occasionally taunt us with our incapacity, but we refuse to believe that these people represent the real English nation. We do, however, most emphatically assert and proclaim that we do not at all belong to the race of Extremists who lay the flattering unction to their soul that India is ripe for self-government, that if to-morrow the whole batch of Englishmen in India embark at Bombay bag and baggage we would be able to govern ourselves. There can be no more dangerous or puerile belief than this, and we feel it our sacred duty to do all that lies in our power to stem the tide of extremist reaction. We have no desire for a complete severence of the ties between India and England, neither do we desire that the colonial form of self-government needs must be introduced in India immediately after the war. . . . . To put it briefly, we want to be partners and not helots, we want to play a prominent part in the Imperial concern without being branded as a subject nation. We would, however, advocate a steady progress towards these ideals, without indulging in a race. Immediately after the war, we desire a complete reconstruction of the public service, the total abolition of the colour bar, the creation of effective non-official majorities in the Provincial and Imperial Councils and complete provincial autonomy. . . . . A bureaucracy that is wholly Indian will be worse than an Anglo-Indian bureaucracy. A public servant must be a servant of the public and not its master, and the popular assemblies must have power over his actions. . . . . We suppose that in making these demands we would not be voted down as visionaries crying for the moon. Our views are deliberate and conceived after due consideration of all those outstanding questions pertaining to the Empire as a whole in its relation with its component parts."

Home Rule for India.

Hindu, Madras, July 5th, 1916.

The Hindu, of the 5th July, observes:—"A local Anglo-Indian contemporary wrote recently in the superior and disdainful manner which it affects when referring to some Indian papers which it called 'organs of freedom,' that 'Personally we do not care whether we learn the views of those papers earlier or later. At a pinch we would even forego the privilege of knowing their views at all.' This insolent utterance is not founded on fact, for we find systematic reference in the Madras Mail to views which are given expression to in the Indian journals especially regarding political questions. . . . . It is matter of history that the British administration has operated as a disruptive force of many an ancient institution in India suited to the genius of the people which formed part of the body politic. . . . . Take again the case of the indentured labourer, and the emigration of Indian coolies under statutory and governmental sanction and encouragement. The system is a standing reproach to the Government who have for long not perceived the evils inherent in it, and allowed it to flourish chiefly in the interests of foreign capitalists. . . . . A radical reform in the nature of the Government is an imperative necessity. It is none other than Home Rule or self-government. . . . . The scheme of self-government, in the best interests of Indians, is not a phantom of their imagination as Anglo-Indian reactionaries are in the habit of proclaiming, but is a thoughtful, well-reasoned one evolved from force of circumstances to which there is considerable authority from Englishmen of superior intellect and character."

13. In New India, of the 5th July, Mrs. Besant writes as follows:— "In deference to the wish expressed by my good friend, the Leader, I say a few words of explanation as to the Home Rule League. Its object, as already stated, is to win Home Rule by constitutional means. The immediate task of those who join it is to work to send delegates to the Lucknow Congress pledged to vote there for Home Rule. . . . . The organisation, if it can at present be called an organisation, is very simple. There are no rules, there are no officers except the Secretary; a few people in any place who wish to work for Home Rule form themselves into a group, and choose one of their number as representative through whom they communicate with the Secretary, and through whom the Secretary communicates with them. They pay Re. 1 as entrance fee and life subscription, and receive a little silver badge and ribbon in return. . . . . Mr. B. G. Tilak and myself are working for Home Rule in perfect amity and unity of purpose, but the Maharashtra League and the loosely organised groups I have mentioned are quite independent of each other.

"ANNIE BESANT."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 5th, 1916.

The Home Rule League.

14. New India, of the 4th July, has the following:—"The London Times reports a suggestion that Mr. Austen Chamberlain may become Munitions Minister, and that Lord Crewe may re-become Secretary of State for India. That would certainly be an immense change for the better, and Mr. Chamberlain would be put more on his own lines. The Marquess of Crewe is not an ideal Indian Secretary, but he would be far less dangerous to the empire than the gentleman from Birmingham."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 4th, 1916.

The Secretary of State for India.

The West Coast Spectator, of the 6th July, states:—"It is said that Mr. Chamberlain will take up the portfolio of Munitions and that Lord Crewe will revert to the India Office. As far as we are concerned, we would not much value the change. Lord Crewe has been almost a failure. If he did not commit any colossal blunder, it was because Lord Hardinge was here to keep the equilibrium. Mr. Chamberlain is a Tory and his regimè at the India Office has not in any way altered the angle of vision."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 6th, 1916.

15. New India, of the 4th July, writes:—"Owing to the Anglo-Indian and anti-Indian spirit which governs Reuter's Agency, India only knows as much of English opinion, and England only knows as much of Indian opinion, as Reuter thinks is good for each country. As he is now effectually aided by the 'Military Censor' who 'violates private mails,' the news we receive is distorted, and we walk uncertainly, like a man in a forest when the moon is shining.

"Mr. Tennant, the Under-Secretary for War, replying to Colonel Churchill's sensible and statesmanlike proposals to enrol Indians in defence of the empire, made a very foolish and irritating speech. He first made the inane remark that the whole of the 315 millions of India could not be drawn upon. We were not aware that Colonel Churchill had proposed to enlist the subjects of the Indian Princes, nor the old men and boys, the women and babies of the British Raj. It is obvious to everyone but Mr. Tennant that Colonel Churchill only proposed to enrol men of military age.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 4th, 1916.

Mr. Tennant and Indian loyalty.

"But, said Mr. Tennant, the question was largely one of officers, and fourteen hundred British officers would be required. Why? We here come up against one of the racial disabilities imposed on Indians; and Indian noble or gentleman is unworthy to bear His Majesty's Commission, and 'it was perfectly impossible to send out newly commissioned second lieutenants to take charge of Indian native troops'. . . . 'The same objections applied,' Mr. Tennant had the insolence to say, 'to raising great blocks of troops in Africa'. Does Mr. Tennant dare to compare the warrior races of India to the negro and negroid tribes of African savages? . . . . . His worst statement came last. 'There was another aspect of the question. If they were going to convert large numbers of natives into warriors and large blocks of territories into armed camps, it would open up a vista of considerable difficulty for statesmen who would have, in the future, to govern those countries.' And what of 'Loyalty to the empire'? What of the 'Blessings of British rule'? Do these only exist so long as the people are unarmed? Shame on you, Mr. Tennant, thus to insult India, and to proclaim from the vantage ground of your place in the British Parliament that the loyalty of India can only be trusted while India is helpless, and that, in the face of the fact that Lord Hardinge, who trusted India, stripped her of troops to help the British in the hour of peril."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 4th, 1916.

American Independence Day and Home Rule for India.

16. In a leader headed "The Fourth of July," New India, of the 4th July, says:—"There is a truth in the statement that history repeats itself, and a similar opportunity is being given to the British Empire in this day and generation in the case of India. Since the passing away of the East India Company, under British rule India has made great headway, but certain difficulties do exist somewhat similar in nature, certainly involving the same principles, which brought the unfortunate separation of America from England. At the present moment there is not a sane Indian who does not recognise the benefits of the British connection with his country. In spite of his realisation that Japan through independent self-government has done in 40 years what we in India have not been able to do under British guidance during 150 years; in spite of the fact he knows that he has to jog along amidst difficulties which are not of his own making; in spite of his feeling of the inferior position assigned to him in his own land; in spite of his clear conviction that the costliest foreign service and its methods are causing an economic drain which is making his country the poorest in the world; in spite of all these he is firmly convinced that Great Britain, because of her liberal principles, the ideals for which she has stood and stands, the sons whom she has brought forth who wrung from an unwilling King the Magna Carta, and fought fights which have made England the land of freedom; because of the existence of such Britishers as Milton and Hampden, Cromwell, Burke, Fox, Gladstone—Great Britain has ranged herself on the side of truth and righteousness and justice. We in India know that Great Britain has not forgotten the lessons of her history, and she has taught them to us. But that same history also makes it clear to us why we are treated as we are, why we suffer as we do. And the way out? . . . . We Indians do not want to go the way of America and sever the British connection; we fervently desire and pray that we may be allowed to remain an integral part of this great empire. We have learnt the lesson which the American Colonies did not, viz., that our association with Great Britain not only means a peaceful existence for us, but also one for the world at large—if, and it is a big if, Great Britain would see what Indian leaders have seen for years past. The karma of Great Britain seems to us to be heavy in the great war now going on; for she could have prevented that world-war if she had heeded the voice of the National Congress. . . . . We had our Patrick Henry in Pherozeshah Mehta, our Samuel Adams in Gopal Krishna Gokhale; we have our sturdy declaration of independence in our Congress constitution; we have our rights of man in the annual reports of our Congress; if we have not done in 30 years what the Americans did in two, it is not because of our inability, but because of our inner conviction that unity with, and not separation from, Great Britain should be our goal. . . . . It is not Great Britain against whom we are raising our voices, but against the little men of the Anglo-Indian caste, who do not seem to be friends of the empire or of the world's peace; they, as the successors of those who rejected the advice of Burke and Chatham, reject the advice of Bright and Fawcett, Bradlaugh and Gladstone, in our own day. But the progress of the world continues and what the high Gods decree that must come, and we of India feel that the Gods have decreed that India shall be free, but in a way different from that of those whose sacred memory we salute to-day, as lovers of Liberty."

17. The Hindu, of the 5th July, states:—"The studied exclusion of India from the deliberations of the Paris Economic Conference has justly caused widespread disappointment in this country. The Conference was convened to consider the economic policy of the Allies including the British Empire and not that of England alone As such the fiscal policy of India must also have surely been considered. Reuter announced a few days back that the economic policy decided upon at the Conference would be the economic policy of the empire after the war. There is, therefore, no room for doubt that the future fiscal policy of India has been shaped at the Paris Conference. It is extremely regrettable that India should not have been represented at a Conference which decided in whatever measure it might be what her own future economic policy should be. . . . . The fact, therefore, was that all the Colonies had practically two and Canada three representatives, while India had not only no representation but had also to submit herself to the humiliation of her policy being determined, no doubt to their advantage, by the Colonies as well as by Britain. This is an utterly intolerable position, and as a correspondent in the Bombay Chronicle suggests, must be very strongly resented through memorials to the Secretary of State from all parts of the country."

India and the Paris Economic Conference.

HINDU, Madras, July 5th, 1916.

18. In an article under the heading "the Coimbatore Incident," New India, of the 6th July, remarks:—"Our readers are already aware how this paper was prevented from reporting what passed at the Forest College the other day, when the Governor paid a visit and distributed prizes. We printed the telegram from our Coimbatore correspondent and, on the strength of its contents, characterised the behaviour of the Anglo-Indian Principal as scandalous. To-day we have received from our correspondent the following statement, and we see that we did not at all write too harshly of the high-handed and un-English action of this Sahib of Coimbatore College. . . . . The Principal is a servant of the people, lives on the salary which comes out of the people's money, and yet has the audacity, simply because an alien Bureaucracy is paramount in this land, to prevent a paper which champions the cause of the people and of right and justice, reporting the proceedings of a public gathering. Here is one more reason why we Indians should join hands to gain Home Rule, and wipe out of existence the desopotism of a haughty and foreign officialdom. . . . . The action of the Coimbatore official is both silly and childish, but the Indian press should take note that it involves a principle. It might be that another white official, on another occasion, may display an equal amount of arbitrariness, and by concealment injure the cause of the people of this country. The officials are servants of the people, and discourtesy does not befit them."

The persecution of New India.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 6th, 1916.

19. New India, of the 7th July, writes:—"Our kind brother of Islam, who wishes New India to save itself by adopting 'a milder tone,' forgets two things: first, it is the frank outspokenness on behalf of Liberty which has inspired enthusiasm, and has thus brought Home Rule, the dream of 'an impatient

A Muslim's views on New India.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 7th, 1916.

idealist,' into the sphere of practical politics; secondly, if New India 'is lost to us for ever,' there will be a dozen journals ready to take its place. Liberty has never yet been won by 'bated breath and whispering humbleness'. Government truly has a long arm, but God has a longer, and God is the arbiter of a nation's destinies."

HINDU, Madras, July 6th, 1916.

"The development of industries."

20. The Hindu, of the the 6th July, observes:—"We have just received a further instalment of the bulletins that are being issued by the Department of Industries, Madras, and we find that of these one has to be singled out as deserving of special notice. It is entitled 'The Development of Industries' and bears ample traces of the hand of an officer of the department who, having signally failed to achieve anything substantial in the field of industrial regeneration of which he was put in charge, attempts at originality in discovering defects in the economic condition of the country which preclude the introduction of industries on large European lines for some time to come. . . . . Industrial progress is not achieved in India in Mr. Tressler's opinion, because wants are not studied, manufactures are not organised, skilled labour is insufficient in quantity and indifferent in quality and commercial trustfulness is remarkable by its absence. Under such conditions, he appears to state, no man, neither the European expert nor the England-returned Indian, could achieve anything. . . . . Why should the Department of Industries, whose object is to develop industries, deny the possibility of industrial development on the ground that a condition is absent especially when such a condition could be brought about only by the establishment of large industries? So far we have proceeded without questioning the premises of the writer. But not only is the leaflet a bundle of contradictions, but is also a confused misrepresentation of economic authorities, if we exclude a liberal sprinkling of cheap sneers. . . . . Steadfast docility, easy contentment with inexpensive dressing, food and amusement in which the Professor finds the cause of the success of the German state-aided system are qualities eminently characteristic of India, and we hope that the writer of the bulletins of the Department of Industries in future, will study his economic authorities better before he ventures on absurd remarks which have no foundation on facts stated in the authorities which he cites in his favour."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 7th, 1916.

The Government and the forthcoming Dye auction.

21. New India, of 7th July, states:—"Often do actions, prompted by the best of motives, transform themselves into engines of hardship; and one such possibility is apprehended in a decision of the Government of Madras concerning the sale of some German dyes declared to be prizes of war. Only persons proved to be consumers will be permitted to bid at the auction sales, which are advertised to be held on Monday next by Messrs. Oakes & Co. The Government are evidently desirous that middlemen should not profit by the transaction. . . . . So far as the terms of auction go, there is nothing to prevent any one of the mills from buying every bit to be sold, and reselling any portion of it to small consumers at extortionate prices. Since there is no guarantee against such a very likely contingency, how is the Government justified in favouring the mills—already amassing large fortunes by war work—against other dealers, and—what is most unhappy—against the poorer purchasers?

"We strongly feel that we shall be doing an ill-service to the Government and the country if we do not acquaint them with the seriousness of the alarm caused by the restriction. It works directly in favour of large and wealthy firms, and against the poorer people who have been hard hit by the war. We would strongly urge that the Government should at once modify their decision and consider whether no way can at all be found to succour the poor and the distressed."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 8th, 1916.

New India, of the 8th July, observes:—"In our yesterday's issue we referred to the auction sale of certain prize goods, which will be effected day after tomorrow. We referred to the curious method which is being adopted, disabling the dealers who are not themselves the consumers from purchasing any of the dye-stock for sale. We do not know what our Indian Chamber of Commerce propose doing in the matter. We hope it will not only send a telegram of protest and then sit quiet. . . . . The Indian Chamber is the mouth-piece of Indian merchants, and it is the duty of the Chamber to protest against any encroachment on their rights and status. The Chamber should officially move, and if the rules of the auction sale are not suitably changed, it should consult its legal advisers and make a motion and stop the Monday auction sale, and request the High Court to demand from the sellers an adequate reason for their procedure of auction sale. . . . . If bodies who represent Indian trade interests remain dumb, then of course in the battle where the fittest survive those only emerge victorious who watch their position, articulate their wants, and demand fair and equal treatment. . . . . The Chamber must learn to work a little more in the open light of day, and minimise the number of hole-and-corner meetings. Their decision and moves on matters of public interest should be made public as far as possible."

22. The following appears in New India of the 8th July:—"The encroachment by the Indian Civil Service on offices belonging rightly to other services is a long standing grievance all over the country, and the latest instance of the same comes from the United Provinces. Even a temporary vacancy in the Inspector-Generalship of Police is filled up by and Indian Civil Service; and Truth comments that such an incident has hardly a parallel even in India. We do not know how far that is so, for such encroachments are a rule rather than exceptions. For instance, in Madras the Inspectors-General of Police are always civilians. The practice is, of course, unfair to the other services, but since the Indian Civil Service members form the Board of Appeal as well the others must submit to the inevitable."

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

23. In a leader on this subject, New India, of the 5th July, says:—The State of Mysore has been long known for its progressive policy, and is one of the standing arguments for Home Rule, for the management by Indians of their own affairs. . . . . Mysore enjoys Home Rule, save for the interference of the British Resident, and she is a standing example of its value."

Mysore and industry.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 5th, 1916.

24. United India and Native States, for the week ending 6th July, writes:—"In connection with the departure from India of Lord Hardinge and the assumption of the Viceroyalty by His Excellency Lord Chelmsford, a Darbar was recently held at Trivandrum and a correspondent sends an account of the function which forms sad reading. He says that all Europeans, whether official or non-official, were accommodated with chairs, while the Indian officials irrespective of their status were denied these. This invidious distinction led to a ludicrous situation; for while Indian officials of the higher rank including High Court Judges, Diwan Peishkars, District Magistrates and heads of departments were made to squat unceremoniously on the floor it happened that Europeans occupying lower official positions, were given chairs. The spectacle could not but produce demoralising effects, especially in an official-ridden state like Travancore, and we can scarcely believe that this aspect of the question escaped the attention of the Diwan. Of course, we endorse the correspondent's opinion that it is an insult to the entire Indian community that in an Indian State, ruled over by an enlightened Indian prince, the Indian officers of His Highness the Maharaja should have been compelled to submit to this humiliating treatment in the presence of Europeans, some of whom, it can well be imagined, were actually the subordinates of the Indian officers."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 6th, 1916.

The Cochin Nayar Regulation and Nambudiri autocrats.

25. The West Coast Spectator, of the 6th July, remarks:—"We have just come in possession of a most astonishing paper alleged to have been submitted to the Cochin Darbar by certain Nambudiris embodying their views on the proposed Cochin Nayar Regulation. . . . . The views expressed are so very narrow, retrograde and provokingly aggressive that we are afraid even the impartial on-looker will be unable to control his temper when going through them. . . . . The gravamen of the opposition to the regulation is that the Nambudiri should not be debarred from cohabiting with Nayar females, at his will and pleasure, from creating progenies broadcast, with a liberal sprinkling of bastards, that he should be given perfect freedom to create children without being called upon to bear the responsibilities of parentage. . . . . If the proposed Nayar Regulation is incorporated into the statute book of Cochin a premium will be placed on the progenerating tendencies of the Nambudiri, by making it imperative that he should provide for the children, the author of whose being he is."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

26. The Sasilekha, of the 30th June, has the following:—The authorities here (Pondicherry) admitted 385 Hindus into the military service, gave them training for some months and sent them to France.

Sasilekha, Madras, June 30th, 1916.

The war.

27. After pointing out that there is nothing common between the Arabs and the Turks except that they are both Muhammadans, and that the former have been dissatisfied with the administration of their country by the latter, the Kerala Patrika, of the 1st July, observes that the news of the declaration of independence by the Arabs is likely to be hailed with joy by all Muhammadans but the Turks, as it will remove all obstacles to their free access to the sacred places of Mecca and Medina, and that it will tend to diminish the power of Turkey by half.

Kerala Patrika, Calicut, July 1st, 1916.

Arabia and Turkey.

28. The Qaumi Report, of the 29th June, in continuation of its previous issues, gives a sketch of the history of Arabia and writes that the British Government, which is a Christian Power, has solemnly promised the Mussalmans that they will protect the holy places of Islam. If the Government, which is the friend of Islam, had not been so considerate and sympathetic, God alone knows what would have happened by now.

Qaumi Report, Madras, June 29th, 1916.

"The tumult of revolt in the desert of Arabia."

The natural result of this occurrence is that most Mussalmans have forgotten the Turks and have begun to complain against the Arabs. Really this enlightenment and sympathy are worthy of all praise. We do not say this event is remarkable because the Arabs have inopportunely changed sides, but we are of opinion that in what they have done they have been actuated by political, rather than by religious, motives.

It has not yet been ascertained what religious grievances the Arabs have, or how the sacred law has been wrested to sanction their procedure.

If in reality this idea of independence has been prompted by political aims and motives, it is advisable for us to await in silence for future development, and let God judge between them, "For is not God the supreme Judge?"

The Qaumi Report, of the 2nd July, gives "in continuation" a sketch of Arabian history and observes:—It is out of place and inopportune to discuss here Turkish politics and civilisation; our object is simply to prove that Arab Government has never been, nor is it likely to be, beneficial.

Qaumi Report, Madras, July 2nd, 1916.

The tumult of the rising in the desert of Arabia.

According to British books of Travel and the accounts of travellers Arabian administration was never regarded as of any utility. It is an historical taunt that the Arabs would not have lost the Spanish Khalifate if they had been able to rule.

The Arabs doubtless have the right to rule the followers of Islam, but in this modern age they will find it difficult to establish their claims to that right until such time as they educate themselves and become civilised. The matter for most apprehension will be that certain Mussalman States and administrations will not be able to recognise the Arab Government because they have foolishly made Mecca and Medina their centres of war.

If they desired to declare their independence of Turkish rule they might have issued such announcement from some other province. As the Arabs have, however, drawn the sword in the sacred territory of God and the Apostle, they have by this act of theirs and by laying siege to Medina violated the sanctity of the holy places and made them the scene of war. These are the reasons why most Mussalmans condemn the procedure of the Arabs and express their regret at, and detestation of their, mad act.

It appears from the telegrams that the Turkish garrison have been taken prisoners. If this be true, the Arab affair becomes more detestable, for, to the generality of Muhammadans, it means that the Turks did not consider it lawful to shed blood in the holy places. It is these things that will make a disagreeable impression on the public and create anxiety among the people. Most Muhammadans consider it to be a very grave occurrence and that the Arabs are entirely to blame. Apparently the religious importance and sacred influence of the holy places have created this sensational impression upon people's minds that the Arabs have proclaimed their independence and at the same time, invited the Turks to stay in the sacred territory.

We frankly say that these ideas are baseless and that there is nothing in the occurrence, and we should not pay much attention to it, for history records several similar incidents. There have been revolts and rebellions in the holy places before.

The writer observes with regret that the contemporary English papers, which are unacquainted with both the Muslim mind and the spirit of Islam, are guilty of egregious blunders in this matter. For example, the Statesman, of the 25th June, stated that the Arab revolt had created a feeling of joy among the Mussalmans of Calcutta, but the telegraphic messages of yesterday show that the Mussalmans of Calcutta repudiated the statement at a public meeting. On the 29th June the paper published the opinion of two Madras Mussalmans, but we and our local contemporaries, in spite of being on the spot in Madras, have not been able to hear "their voices". We fear this information also is more or less as false as the report regarding the reputed feeling of the Calcutta Mussalmans! In any case no individual or combined Muslim opinion can nullify the divine commands, Koranic texts, the traditions of the Apostle of God, the sacred law and the consensus of opinion of the Muslim community.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, June 30th, 1916

29. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 30th June, writes:—There is no doubt that the Government, whose subjects we have the pride and honour of being, is a powerful one. Its strength and vast resources have been realized, not only by the Allies but also by the enemy. Reference has frequently been made in our columns to the British Naval power and resources. Every Indian is perfectly aware that it is on account of Britain alone that the Allies are still facing the enemy successfully, repulsing their attacks and inflicting irreparable losses on them. The enemy is aware that the courage, fortitude, and perseverance of the Allies are daily increasing.

"A German newspaper's testimony to the might of Great Britain."

A German newspaper the Kolnishe Zeitung expresses plainly and openly that much speculation is rife as to the Russian menace, and states that the Germans are threatened with disaster on the British Front. The paper further remarks that the resources and supplies of England are so enormous that the like has never been dreamt of. There is no doubt that the preparations for a big offensive which the Germans dread will shortly commence. This British offensive will be on a large scale.

The German paper accordingly advises its national military leaders not to pay so much attention to the Eastern Campaign, but to concentrate their united efforts upon the Western Front otherwise they (the Germans) will find themselves involved in great difficulties.

From this it may be concluded that the might of our kind Government is appreciated by the enemy's press, and that they fear new developments from the Allied offensive and that the scales will turn in favour of Great Britain.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, July 1st, 1916.

30. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 1st July, writes:—Recently history has been placing before the world the fact that in order to reach the glittering peaks of victory

Whose will be the final victory?

rivers of blood will have to flow. In the Russo-Japanese war the storming of Port Arthur was the most sanguinary struggle in the whole campaign and in the Balkan struggle the battle around Adrianople in the last phase of the campaign was the most desperate battle of the war. In the present world-war the aim of the Germans is to concentrate their energies on Verdun, but the brave forces of the Allies have absolutely baffled all their attempts and prevented them from advancing a single inch. In the shambles of Verdun hundreds of thousands of Germans have been slain and daily scores of trainloads of German dead may be seen passing. In fact, the enemy's loss is irreparable.

Proceeding, the writer remarks :—Taking into consideration the present progress of the war and Military and Naval strength of Great Britain Military experts opine that side will be victorious which is supported by Great Britain. In political circles also the same opinion prevails for Great Britain has neither wronged any one nor coveted any territory nor attempted to ruin any. Her hands are clean and her garments are unstained by the blood of the innocent. God helps only those who are thus unpolluted.

Qaumi Report, Madras, July 4th, 1916.

Displeasure at the Arab affair.

31. The Qaumi Report, of the 4th July, writes that a meeting of the Council of the Madras Presidency Muslim League was held at the "Anjuman" under the Presidency of Nawab Raūf Ahmad Khan Bahadur, Parthan, yesterday evening when Mr. Yaqūb Hasan Sait Sahib explained the present position and the substance of the resolution of the All-India Muslim League, etc. After some deliberation and discussion he moved the following resolution which was carried unanimously :—"That this Council of the Madras Presidency Muslim League records its opinion that the news of the revolutionary action of the Sharif of Mecca, in proclaiming Arab independence and bringing about a state of war in the region of the holy places utterly regardless of their sanctity, has caused the Mussalmans of Southern India much pain.

"The Council is also of opinion that the interference in the matter on the part of any European Power would be resented by Indian Mussalmans."

II.—Home Administration.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, July 3rd, 1916.

The pay of police constables.

32. The Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd July, feels highly gratified that the pay of police constables has been raised and says :—This no doubt involves a rise in the expenditure incurred on account of the Police Department. If the cost of Police administration is to be reduced, reforms such as the reduction in the number of higher officers in the department and in their pay, and the abolition of unnecessary expenditure in the name of the Criminal Investigation Department should be effected. There is no use starving the subordinate officers. Besides raising the pay of constables, the Government should take steps to make the department popular, so that the educated classes may enter it. The police should so conduct themselves that the people will not look upon them with a suspicious eye. There must be mutual confidence between the police and the people, and so long as this is wanting, there is no use giving the constables an increase in their pay except that it enables them to provide themselves with some comforts of life, which they justly deserve.

Kerala Sanchari, Calicut, July 5th, 1916.

The pay of the police constables.

Referring to the increase proposed to be made in the expenditure of the Police department by four lakhs, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 5th July, observes that, except that it will enable the Government to increase the number of constables, it is not likely to produce any material results, so far as their pay is concerned.

Kerala Patrika, Calicut, July 1st, 1916.

Rash driving in Calicut.

33. The Kerala Patrika, of the 1st July, draws attention to the inconvenience caused to the people by the rash driving of hackney carriages in certain parts of Calicut, as well as to the nuisance caused by herds of cattle being driven through the streets by young boys for purposes of grazing, and hopes that the authorities concerned will do the needful in the matter.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, July 4th, 1916.

The assassination of the Deputy Superintendent of Police in Calcutta.

34. The Keralodayam, of the 4th July, expresses regret at the assassination of Mr. Vasant Kumar Chaterjea, Deputy Superintendent of Police, and asks whether it will not be possible for the Government to root out these anarchists from this country.

MALAYALI, Quilon, July 5th, 1916.

The assassination of the Deputy Superintendent of Police in Calcutta.

The Malayali, of the 5th July, also expresses regret at the dastardly murder of the Deputy Superintendent of Police in Calcutta, and observes that, so long as such horrible crimes are committed, the rulers cannot be expected to have confidence in the ruled, and that it is deplorable that the anarchists should resort to them at this juncture, when several Indians are working hard for the defence and welfare of India.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 30th, 1916.

Reforms in education.

35. Referring to an article said to have been written by the New Statesman published in England, advocating the appointment of a Royal Commission to consider and report on the lines on which education has to be imparted after the end of the war, the Swadesamitran, of the 30th June, remarks:—If in England itself, which is the chief factor in the British Empire, the necessity has arisen to reform the system of education thoroughly, much need not be said of the necessity for reforming it in India, which is behind the majority of the countries in the world in the matter of education. The New Statesman regrets that only seven million children, out of 452 millions, which is the population of Great Britain, are having primary education in England. Compare this with India, where the number of students having education in general in 1914–15 was only 7,450,000 out of a population of 243 millions. One of the reasons why education has not spread in India is the absence of a sufficient number of schools and colleges in the country. Another reason, which seems to apply to the case of England also, is the fact that the poorer classes find it necessary to make their sons earn their livelihood quite early in life and cannot therefore send them to school. The suggestion of the New Statesman that scholarships should be freely awarded in order to make it possible for the intelligent children of poor people to have education is well worth being noted by every one here.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 1st, 1916.

Free and compulsory education.

36. The Andhrapatrika, of the 1st July, comments on the great progress made in education in Baroda, and remarks:—It is difficult to understand why in the British Provinces, the British Government have not made a law similar to the Compulsory Education Act now in force in Baroda. Almost all the villages in that State have one school each. Who can say when we are going to have a similar state of things here or whether we are going to have it at all?

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, June 28th, 1916.

A junior Arabic Professorship in the Presidency College.

37. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 28th June, referring to the notification regarding the appointment of a junior Arabic Professor in the Presidency College and to the several applications for the place, suggests for the appointment of Moulvi Ghulam Musai Raza Sahib Muhtram, the present headmaster of the Muhammadan school, Georgetown, and says that he is a suitable candidate for the post.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 1st, 1916.

"Arabic in the Presidency College."

38. The Qaumi Report, of the 1st July, in a leader says:—"Some of the candidates for the appointment of Arabic Professor in the Presidency College are endeavouring to obtain the signatures of some prominent persons in the city and thus to establish their knowledge of Arabic."

The writer thinks "an Arabic scholar should be selected" and opines that there is no occasion to give this chair in our University to a man of ordinary attainments with no academical distinctions when the salary is about Rs. 200 per mensem, and the Bengal, Allahabad and Punjab Universities employ professors holding the highest degrees who are savants in Arabic literature, the boast of the community and the pride of the University.

The article observes that in making the appointment no regard should be had to the recommendation of friends or the highly coloured certificates of flatterers. Most of the books prescribed for the University courses of study are such that no one lacking a taste for Arabic, or deficient in a deep knowledge of the language, can possibly appreciate, for example the difference between the Saba-i-Mullakat and Hariri, or between abstract and concrete. If such a person were appointed it would mean the death of Arabic in Madras.

There are three or four ancient Ulema but how long are they going to last? After they are gone it is extremely unlikely that the product of the colleges will keep Arabic learning alive. A College Professor of Arabic should, above all, be an expert in philology and possess a wide knowledge of the history of the literature and the language, but we have little hope of any of the candidates possessing such knowledge. To have read a few stories in the Arabian Nights and to be able to distinguish between subject and object is one thing, and to be able to appreciate the grammatical niceties of Zuhair, Imr-al-Kais and Mutanabbī is another. (To be continued).

39. The Qaumi Report, of the 4th July, has a leader, on the marginally-noted subject, which runs thus:—The duties of a professor are very important and the new method of teaching is very difficult. If the Government make a mistake in the appointment of the professor and give the place to a man who really does not know Arabic, we should not regard the appointment as a proper one, but would congratulate the fortunate individual on the receipt of a substantial salary.

Qaumi Report, Madras, July 4th, 1916.

"The question of an Arabic Professor."

We do not point out any special man, for we personally know that in Madras persons who may be considered professors are non-existent. If certain ancient individuals are able to teach Hariri's Muqamat or explain an easy method of learning grammar they cannot be called professors.

A professor should be well acquainted with history and literature. He should be familiar with the pre-Islamic poets and the special feature of Arabian poetry. Besides he should have a knowledge of Arab tribes and genealogies.

Above all he should be an expert in philology in order to make the study of Arabic attractive to pupils. He should be a man of interesting ideas so that men might be attracted to his class. His manners should be engaging so that pupils may not avoid him. His attainments should bear the stamp of academical distinction so that pupils may not be deceived. If the Government appoint a man with an imperfect knowledge of the language we shall be compelled to declare that they have not done justice by Arabic. As the Government have announced that the appointment will be experimental, therefore the appointment of an unsuitable person would never give us satisfaction. If the Government really wants to see whether our pupils have a taste for reading Arabic they should select a suitable and strong professor otherwise they will be held responsible for the mistake.

We are sure that in the matter of the appointment of an Arabic Professor, the Government can obtain valuable assistance from the Acting Chief Justice Moulavi Abdur Rahim Sahib and Mr. Prendergast, Translator to Government. Both are able men and thoroughly conversant with Arabic, and from personal knowledge we are able to assert that the Moulavi Sahib being a Mussalman has a perfect and hereditary knowledge of the language, while Mr. Prendergast's profound Arabic learning is such as non-Mussalmans may be proud of.

We believe that these gentlemen are well acquainted with what should be the qualifications of a professor and would be able to make a satisfactory selection from among the candidates. In any case the matter is a very important one, and we are certain that the Government will not make a wrong choice.

(e) Local and Municipal.

TAMILIAN, Madras, June 14th, 1916.

40. The Tamilian, of the 14th June *, invites the attention of the Municipal authorities to the miserable condition of the roads in Madras, especially the bye-lanes in Chintadripet and other places, and prays the Divisional Commissioners to get out of their convenient abodes for a while and inspect these localities personally. In the opinion of this paper, the condition of the roads will not be so bad as it is now, if the Commissioners were Europeans.

The Madras roads.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, June 30th, 1916.

41. In a lengthy leading article, referring to the contest for the chairmanship of the Mangalore municipality between the District Surgeon Dr. Verghese and M. Panduranga Kini, a retired Deputy Collector, which resulted in the withdrawal, at the eleventh hour, of the latter candidate, and the unanimous election of the former, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 30th June, purports to observe that when a Government officer of the position and influence of a District Medical and Sanitary officer stands for election and succeeds, he can neither be deemed to have been elected nor nominated, but only "self-elected", and that the election itself can have no meaning in cases like this, where the voters neither use their own discretion nor go according to the wishes of the people they represent in the council, but only yield to the pressure of big men. The paper remarks that the success of a candidate under such conditions must be deemed an abuse of the right of election and that it would be unpleasant to some of the councillors to enter into the details which led to such abuse and further adds that the popular Viceroy Lord Ripon intended these rights of local self-government as the first step towards Swaraj, that if the rules were to preclude Government servants from standing for election, the present situation would not have arisen at all and that under the present system of local self-government the officers of Government at least should have the generosity not to appropriate to themselves the right which primarily belongs to the people.

The Chairmanship of the Mangalore Municipality.

The paper next publishes numerous extracts of letters from its correspondents pointing out that it is easy to see how far a District Medical and Sanitary officer, with the innumerable duties attaching to his office, can be expected to bear the additional burden and responsibilities of a municipal chairman.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, July 5th, 1916.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, June 26th, 1916.

43. The Lokopakari, of the 26th June, observes:—Five million men have joined the British Army voluntarily in England. The Indians are dejected at not having this privilege. They are ready to sacrifice their body and life for the sake of the British Empire. The British Government has accepted only pecuniary support from them, but has declined to permit them to serve in the army. They deem this to be an insult to them and feel dissatisfied.

The Indian Army.

* Received in the current week.

The Indian Army.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 24th June, institutes a comparison between the strength of the army in India, and that in other countries, and concludes that the military strength in India is inadequate for the defence of the country and that an inordinately large sum is expended on it. The paper observes that the rulers are averse to the creation of reserve forces and condemns the want of confidence in the people that lies at the bottom of this. It strongly advocates the creation of an army of volunteers which would considerably lighten the burden on the people while adding to the efficiency of military strength of the country. It condemns this want of confidence in such an army in these days when the Emperor down to the Governor-General openly acknowledge the loyalty of the Indians.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, June 24th, 1916.

The Congress Presidentship.

44. The Hindu Nesan, of the 26th June, writes:—We learn that the names of Sir S. Subramania Ayyar, Mr. Vijayaraghava Achariyar of Salem, Sir Sayyid Ali Imam, Mr. Hasan Imam, Babu Ambicacharan Muzumdar, Mr. Taji Appaji Khare, Mr. Setalvad and Mrs. Besant are among those proposed for the Presidentship of the coming congress. Of these, Sir S. Subramania Ayyar is too old to aspire for this honour, and we can surely say that he will not welcome the proposal. As for Sir Sayyid Ali Imam, the public may think that, having been in service till recently, he will look at public questions through official eyes. We had a taste of a retired Government official being the President of the congress in Mr. S. P. Sinha last year and that is sufficient. If Sir Sayyid Ali Imam is chosen this year, it will give room to the complaint that the system of selecting a retired official of the Government of India as the President of the congress has come into vogue. As regards Mrs. Besant, there is no necessity to think of her, when there are several Indians capable of occupying this position. So the choice will have to be made from the remaining five gentlemen. Of these, we would choose only Mr. Vijayarahava Achari. He has been a sympathiser of the congress for many years. He has made a mark already, both in the Imperial and Provincial Legislative Councils. We are glad to note that the Leader of Allahabad also endorses our view.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, June 26th, 1916.

The Abkāri sales.

45. Referring to a communication said to have been sent by the Secretary of State for the colonies to the Ceylon Government five years back, condemning the system of selling the right of vending toddy and arrack by auction, the Swadesamitran, of the 26th June, says:—It is this very opinion that is being advocated by our people for the last so many years. Auctioning leads to competition in the matter of securing the right and this in turn results in increasing the amount of the bid. To make up this amount, the shopkeepers naturally try to increase the quantity sold or mix other substances with toddy and arrack. As the latter artifice reduces the intoxicant nature of toddy and arrack, drunkards begin to consume a larger quantity of it. It is in consideration of all these facts that our people have been condemning the system of auction; but the Government has paid no heed to our cry. It is the large amount of income which the Government derives from this that makes it hesitate to give up the system. But, as pointed out by the Secretary of State for the Colonies in the communication above referred to, it is the primary duty of the Government to reduce the consumption of intoxicants by the people, in the interests of their health and well-being and this can be done only by increasing the price of intoxicants. We hope the Government of India will fall in with the view of the Secretary of State for the Colonies and save the poor people from ruin by replacing the existing system by one of collecting a definite license fee from the shop-keepers.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 26th, 1916.

India after the war.

46. Referring to a portion of a speech said to have been delivered by Lord Willingdon at Bombay, in which he is reported to have asked the Mahratta leaders not to rouse the public feeling at this juncture by allowing a discussion about political reforms to be introduced in India after the end of the war, the

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, June 27th, 1916.

Swadesamitran, of the 27th June, says:—No Indian denies the fact that it is our primary duty to strive for securing victory for the British in this war. But it is not at all reasonable to prevent the people from considering about reforms, the necessity for which has been brought out by the war itself. The war may come to an end at any moment. It is because the westerns know that the war may revolutionise several institutions that they are seriously considering about the means of securing the commercial and other interests of the country after the war. The British Colonies are all of them trying to bring about a thorough change in the very system of administration. What is then the justification for preventing the Indians alone from thinking about their condition after the war and making any effort in view to its improvement? What harm can result from the Indians thinking about it? While the whole world is appreciating the readiness of the Indians to help the Emperor to obtain a victory in this war, why should they be suspected unnecessarily like this? With the London Times, we will say that the present juncture is the best time for considering about the reforms to be introduced in India in consonance with the changes proposed to be introduced in the Imperial constitution. The Anglo-Indian papers are against this merely because they fear that the changes resulting from such reforms will affect their power and influence. Our statesmen should not therefore pay any heed to their opposition.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 1st, 1916.

Nominations to the Legislative Council.

47. The Swadesamitran, of the 1st July, writes:—Our readers are aware that the number of representative members in the Madras Legislative Council is smaller than that in other Provinces and that the Government of Madras nominates a larger number of officials than the other Provincial Governments and thereby increases its influence. In Bengal and Bombay, the number of officials nominated to the Legislative Council has always been less than that of the non-officials so nominated. It is to be noted that Lord Carmichael has this time reduced the number of officials nominated still further and that he has not nominated the Government Revenue and Municipal Secretaries; when this gentleman was Governor of Madras, he nominated the late Diwan Bahadur Audinarayanayya to a vacancy caused by the resignation of an official member. But when a similar vacancy occurred subsequently, our present Governor gave it again to an official. We do not know why Lord Pentland, who is a friend of Lord Carmichael and an admirer of his principles, ignores the liberal and progressive policy adopted by him and is inclined to increase the power of the Bureaucracy. We hope that in nominating members to the Council this time, Lord Pentland will act according to public opinion and reduce the number of officials nominated, increasing correspondingly the number of non-officials nominated.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 29th, 1916.

New India and the Forest College, Coimbatore.

48. The Andhrapatrika, of the 29th June, protests against the action of the Principal of the Forest College at Coimbatore in refusing to issue a ticket of admission to the representative of New India on the occasion of prize distribution, and trusts that His Excellency Lord Pentland will interfere in the matter and warn the Principal.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, June 30th, 1916.

Home Rule for India.

49. The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th June, contains a translation of the first pamphlet issued by the Home Rule for India League established in Great Britain, in which is found the following:—India does not wish to drive away the English. What she wants is equal treatment with them in her own land. Indians will be glad to have the English as their fellow-subjects and not as their superiors or rulers. It is nowhere to be found in history that one nation ruled over another for ever. So the Government of India should cease to be foreign and become Indian. Loyalty to the sovereign in India is unshakeable. There has never been loyalty to the Anglo-Indian. The gulf of difference between the Anglo-Indians and the Indians is ever widening. In the 20th century England should not commit the same mistake with reference to India as she had done with reference to America in the 18th century. The stability of the world-wide British Empire depends on the help that England willingly gives to India in establishing self-government in that country.

Village panchayats.

50. In commenting on the extracts from papers on the subject of the organisation of village panchayats in the Madras Presidency, the Andhrapatrika, of the 1st July, says:—From a perusal of the papers it will be evident that the officers of the Government who are responsible for changes, mark out a certain plan and then try to utilise any evidence that may subsequently be forthcoming to their own advantage whatever its nature and effect may be. If without consulting the narrow-minded Board of Revenue and bringing about an unsatisfactory state of things, the Government themselves had acted merely on the evidence, they would have done immense good. We hope that they will reconsider the matter.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 1st, 1916.

Writing on the same subject the Andhrapatrika, of the 4th July, says:—From a perusal of the extracts published by the Government, it will appear that the idea of panchayats permeates the very blood of the people in all parts of this Presidency. Again, the extracts themselves are an answer to many of the objections of the Board of Revenue. It is plain that it is not impossible to overcome the difficulty of factions. It is wrong to say that under the panchayat system people belonging to the higher castes will oppress the lower classes. The panchayats are not new to this country. The conditions of the country are quite suited to them. The authorities have only to create them and vest them with independent powers. If without doing so, they retain all powers in their own hands and say that the system of panchayats does not work successfully, such a policy is destructive and not constructive.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1916.

Village panchayats.

Referring to the publication of a précis of the papers connected with the reorganisation of the village panchayats, the Kerala Patrika, of the 1st July, has the following among other things:—The Government have decided to enhance the powers of the village magistrate and to establish bench courts to help him. Such courts have already been established in several places for the disposal of petty civil cases. If these courts be reformed still further, the panchayats will produce the intended results. Besides the panchayats should be granted increased powers in respect of sanitation and education, though some people fear, and rightly too, that their being invested with such powers will lead to the persecution of the poor and low class people, to prevent which, however, the necessary precautions may be taken, when rules are drafted. As the administration of villages by the panchayats will serve to train the people in the art of self-government, it goes without saying that their establishment is absolutely necessary. As there are qualified men in almost all the villages in Malabar, it is possible to establish the panchayats therein, with full powers granted to them, and the people are not likely to grudge the payment of an additional tax on that account.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 1st, 1916.

While eulogising the efforts of the Government of India to revive village panchayats, the foundation stone of the fabric of self-government, the Manorama, of the 30th June, thinks that, if the village courts are given civil and criminal powers, it will enable the poor villagers not to resort to ordinary courts, which entails heavy expenditure and delay, and rejoices at the concurrence of the Government with the Decentralisation Commission in thinking that no new taxes should be levied on this account. It, however, doubts that the present system represents the views of the people, inasmuch as the report of the Commission is not based on the evidences of the villagers, and hopes that the Government will lose no time in gathering their opinions on the subject.

MANORAMA, Calicut, June 30th, 1916.

The Manorama, of the 4th July, again refers to the subject and rejoices that the Government are now trying to collect the opinions of the people thereon, which, however, the paper hopes, they will not fail to follow.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 4th, 1916.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1916.

The South African Indians.

51. Referring to the appeal of the Indians in South Africa for a reduction of the freight on the necessaries of life, the Andhrapatrika, of the 4th July, prays that His Excellency Lord Chelmsford will follow the policy of Lord Hardinge and consider the appeal favourably.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1916.

The Secretary of State for India.

52. With reference to the rumour that Lord Crewe will once again be appointed as Secretary of State for India, the Andhrapatrika, of the 4th July, remarks:—Mr. Chamberlain has not only not adopted any new angle of vision and pursued any liberal policy in relation to India, but he has also not given expression to any liberal views. His father was an advocate of the policy of protection in trade. But the son did not even think of introducing such a policy in India. The time of no other Secretary of State for India has been more barren of any good results. India will not therefore very much regret to part with him. But she cannot, at the same time, welcome the appointment of Lord Crewe as Secretary of State for India with any great enthusiasm. It hopes that the authorities will appoint Lord Hardinge to that office.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 4th, 1916.

The Administration of India.

53. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th July, reports Mr. Radcliffe to have made the following remarks in the course of an article contributed to the Nation published in London:—The authorities have now crushed the life of India and lord over her. They have made it impossible for the teacher, the newspaper editor, the political reformer, or the social servant to open his mouth, and serve the country. They are wielding the bureaucratic machine just as they please. The deplorable way in which the enthusiasm of the Indians wishing to join the army and serve the empire was suppressed, will one day be laid bare. The wonderful loyalty and patience manifested by India cannot stand firm unless we follow the policy of mutual confidence, advocated by Lord Hardinge. . . . . The Irish rebellion is a warning to us, and the Government of India has to note this warning well.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, June 24th, 1916.

Swaraj.

54. The Kistnapatrika, of the 24th June, contains an article under the heading "Why is swaraj necessary? An exhortation by Mrs. Annie Besant," which concludes as follows:—India cannot be raised to eminence either by the British Government or by addressing audiences. It is by the self-endeavours of the sons and daughters of the soil, by a spirit of self-respect and by the expansion of national consciousness, that she can reach any eminence. I wish that you all unite and make swaraj possible. India awaits swaraj and is prepared for it. Set to work, agitate and gain your object with the help of the charm "Vande Mataram."

HITAKARINI, Ellore, June 25th, 1916.

Swaraj.

The Hitakarini, of the 25th June, contains a Telugu version of Mr. Tilak's speech at Ahmednagar already abstracted from the Kistnapatrika, of the 17th June, on page 1099 of the Weekly Report under the heading "Swaraj, our right."

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 28th, 1916.

Plague inspection at Mandapam.

55. The Andhraprakasika, of the 28th June, invites the attention of the Government to the inconveniences to which passengers are subjected at Mandapam under the plea of plague inspection and remarks:—This betrays the helplessness on the part of the Government, who have not the power to free the passengers from their difficulties.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, June 28th, 1916.

The Europeans and the Indians.

56. The Andhraprakasika, of the 28th June, says:—We are not in agreement with those who demand Swaraj in return for the services rendered to the Empire by India during the present crisis. We do not want any wages for what we have done. We urge that the Government should repose the same confidence in us as we repose in them and that it is their duty to give us the same facilities of administering the country as they do to their countrymen. We can emphatically assert that the coloured races are in every way equal to the Europeans. To say that the former cannot be compared to the latter is selfish.

57. Referring to the dismissal from office of a supervisor drawing a salary of Rs. 200 in the District Board of Muzafurpore for the mere fault of failing to get up from his seat and greet a European lady, the Andhraprakasika, of the 1st July, remarks:—The supervisor has been grossly insulted by the lady in question and her servant and also by certain European officers and then dismissed from service. If the rulers are given to such pride and arrogance, it is impossible that the ruled will place any trust in them.

The rulers and the ruled.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 1st, 1916.

58. In an article under the heading "the strange fate of newspapers", the Bharathi, of the 30th June, writes:—Hitherto, the vernacular newspapers were in constant dread of the Press Act of 1910 and all efforts to lessen its rigour had proved fruitless. Now, even such famous English newspapers as New India, the Hindu Patriot and the Chronicle find this Press Law a mill-stone round their necks. Even children and shepherds know how brave and learned is Mrs. Besant and what reforms she has brought about in this country. Her New India is one of the best edited dailies in India. It is due to the selfless and untiring labours of Mrs. Besant, and her fearless devotion to the cause of truth that has given to this paper the pre-eminence it has attained. Mrs. Besant has been endeavouring to conciliate the different parties of the Congress, and her efforts have already met with considerable success. Her goal is to gain Home Rule for India at the close of the war and she seeks to educate the people in this direction through her New India from now onwards. There can be no doubt that her resolute adherence to this just cause has instilled a new spirit into the minds of the people. Her firmness in continuing the work she has undertaken, her European parentage, her marvellous intellectual capacity, the support she has from the most eminent personages everywhere and, above all, the justice of the cause she has championed on behalf of India are all so many guarantees that her efforts will eventually be crowned with success. From the Himalyas to Cape Comorin an uproar has been raised against the Press Act. We hope that the troubles which this illustrious woman has to face may prove the means of bringing better days to the entire press.

Mrs. Besant and New India.

BHARATHI, Bellary, June 30th, 1916.

59. In speaking of the treatment accorded to His Highness the Maharaja of Travancore by the European residents in Coonoor, which is a fitting reward for all His Highness' kindnesses to those in his own State, the Desabhimani, of the 1st July, quotes the following from an English paper:—

"Kiss John Bull, he will kick you.
"Cuff John Bull, he will kiss you."

The Europeans in Coonoor and the Maharaja of Travancore.

DESABHIMANI, Quilon, July 1st, 1916.

60. In two successive articles in its issues of the 1st and 5th July under the heading the "Future of India", the Malayali refers to the differences of opinion on the subject of self-government, and to the various obstacles which stand in the way of its being granted to India, observes that India will undoubtedly be given many privileges at the end of the war, but that the people should not be dissatisfied, if all their hopes are not immediately realised, and suggests that the Congress should, as it did on former occasions, send a deputation to England to represent their views to the authorities there.

The future of India.

MALAYALI, Quilon, July 1st & 5th, 1916.

61. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 28th June, publishes the following letter from Moulvi Saiyid Ahmad Sahib:—The enthusiastic aid given to the benign Government by the leaders of all communities in India is a proof of their sincerity, devotion and of their desire for the maintenance of peace in the country. If considered carefully it does not mean loyalty to Government merely, but it implies also personal security, religious toleration and the betterment of future generations.

The loyal subjects of the benign Government.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, June 28th, 1916.

It is due to the Government alone that knowledge has spread in the country and the equality we enjoy is the outcome of its fair dealing. Therefore whatever we do for ourselves we should do for the Government in order to maintain this religious freedom, comfort, peace and security, intellectual progress and material prosperity which at present are ours.

Who is there that does not know that our Government has always been devoted to peace and security, that it has been the people's friend, just and fair, the sympathiser with the feeble, the weak and the unfortunate, and, at the same time, the bitter enemy of tyranny and oppression?

Our Government was obliged to join in this world-war simply because of its love of right and fair-play.

Our Government is in the right and God defends the right. We observe that even those students, whose heads had been turned by reading the history of foreign countries, are now devoted to the Government while all leaders are not only raising their hands in prayer but giving practical assistance. The Indian army and the Chiefs of India who have begun to show their real worth are unremitting in their endeavours to demonstrate their bravery and sympathy by giving their heads for foot-balls and their lives for their dear native land and the Government. Those who have been killed have obtained the martyr's crown, and those who still live are the heroes of their communities. They went and came back safely notwithstanding great hardships and intense cold and snow they never shirked. To them firing was but as fireworks, heat of battle as the heat of commercial bargaining. These are the men who have upheld the honour of the country.

Just as the Indian army has shown itself worthy of taking part in the European conflict so should all other subjects give in some way or other practical proof of their worthiness. Every man should do whatever work he is fit for in order to assist in the defence of his country. For in this fight the victory is ours and the crown of people's loyalty will be placed on our heads when we come back as conquerors. It will be a source of pride to us and progeny for ever. It will find a prominent place on the pages of history and our names will be written in letters of gold.

III.—Legislation.

Swadesamitran, Madras, June 27th, 1916.

The Press Act.

62. The Swadesamitran, of the 27th June, refers to the proceedings of the meeting held last week in Bombay at the instance of the Press Association and repeats its arguments in favour of the abolition of this Act.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, July 1st, 1916.

The Press Act.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 1st July, contains an article on the Press Act in English, which concludes as follows:—"Therefore it is not as much the repeal of the Press Act one should wish for, but its modifications in such wise as to provide for effective judicial intervention even in such an admitted case as that of the Comrade. There must be a provision for appeal to the High Court to compel the Government to disclose their grounds for penalizing any paper. The compulsion on the Government to disclose their grounds of action against any paper must be absolute and if this result could be achieved, it would be more than repealing the Act."

Keralodayam, Trichur, July 4th, 1916.

The Madras Legislative Council.

63. The Keralodayam, of the 4th July, complains that of all the Legislative Councils in India, the Madras Legislative Council contains the largest number of official and nominated members, and points out that such a state of things is not conducive to efficient administration. The paper adds that there is some force in the argument of the people that the members, whom the Government directly nominate, are generally inexperienced and incapable persons, and observes that the Government will do well to pay attention to this matter and nominate qualified persons to the council.

IV.—Native States.

64. The Swadesamitran, of the 29th June, observes:—The system of introducing the budget in the Legislative Council and allowing the members thereof to express their opinion about it came into vogue in Mysore only in 1914. Now the Mysore Darbar has gone a step further in permitting the Representative Assembly also to discuss the budget and to submit their opinion to the Darbar. This shows clearly how anxious the Mysore Government is to ascertain the opinion of its subjects and act upon it. One peculiar feature of the privilege given to the assembly is that the members are not merely expected to make superficial speeches about the budget, but that particular members are deputed to consider well about particular items in the budget and lay their views before the assembly. This system is surely more advantageous than the one obtaining in the other Legislative Councils in India. If a number of representative members simply deliver superficial speeches about a proposal, the Government members, who are well posted regarding the facts in their favour, find it easy to refute the arguments of the former and browbeat them. But when individual members of the Council are equally well posted about the different aspects of a question, as is the case in Mysore now, the Government will be forced to act upon the suggestions made by them. We wish this system is introduced in our Legislative Councils also. But before doing it, the Government members should learn to attach some weight to the suggestions of the representatives of the people. If it is true, as was stated by Lord Pentland at the close of the last meeting of the Legislative Council, that the Government members and the representative members are now bound by a closer tie than before, he should lose no time in adopting the system in vogue in Mysore and not only allow particular members of the Council to make a special study of particular items in the budget, but also see that the Government officials afford all facilities for the representative members to do so.

The Mysore Legislative Council.

Swadesamitran, Madras, June 29th, 1916.

65. The Mysore Star, of the 2nd July, writes:—While it will be admitted on all hands that a measure of such momentous and far-reaching importance as the Mysore University Bill should have the support of the entire population of the province, it is curious how the people could be expected to give full expression to their opinions and criticism within eight days of the publication of the Bill. While the Government themselves have taken nearly three or four years to sketch the outlines of the measure, the people should have been allowed at least as many months to discuss the same. It is with mingled feelings of surprise and regret therefore that we look upon this rushing of the Bill through the Council. The scheme is in some respects better than that of the Madras University while in others it is an imitation of it but in one respect it is surely more rigid. Although the provision for granting one-third of the students exemption from the payment of fees may appear a very liberal concession, the rule that, in regard to B.A. and other degree examinations, the candidates should succeed in all three branches at the same examination and that success in any branch will not exempt him from examination in that branch unless he obtains 60 per cent of the marks assigned to it is far more rigourous than the rule of the Madras University which permits the completion of the examination in parts. Further, the entrance examination might prove a stumbling block to most students. The place assigned to the vernacular of the province is hardly satisfactory. The fullest prominence has been given to English. Canarese is placed on a par with other languages such as Telugu, Tamil, Sanskrit, Hindustani, Parsi and French. Even here, the course prescribed in Canarese is purely literary and offers no opportunities for enriching the language by stimulating the growth of scientific literature. Again, in regard to the study of medicine, philosophy, etc., the people have still to depend on the other Universities such as that of Madras. Under these circumstances we are left to wonder whether our new University has any features at all which may be considered laudable.

The Mysore University.

Mysore Star, Mysore, July 2nd, 1916.

Instead of modelling our University on lines which were commendable to the leaders of the other Universities, we wish it were more in consonance with the views of those Indian brethren who founded the Hindu University. Many, both among Indians and foreigners, have already remarked that so far there is nothing very commendable in our scheme. If our University should proceed on the lines of the ancient Universities with none of the advantages of the modern institutions to future generations, we must observe that so costly a scheme as this will only prove a burden on the resources of the State. We may find consolation however in the Diwan's assurance in the Legislative Council on this subject the other day that all shortcomings which may be observed in the course of the actual operation of the scheme will be speedily removed.

Vokkaligara Patrike, Bangalore, July 5th, 1916.

The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 5th July, in a leading article on the same subject, passes the same criticisms. In another paragraph the same paper quotes the Hon'ble Mr. Paranjpe's speech in the Bombay Legislative Council pointing out that, while the higher officers of the Educational department receive fat salaries and allowances, no thought is given to the removal of the hardships endured by the low-paid village school-masters. The paper thereupon observes:—Those who have the cause of education at heart must first place elementary education on a firm and thorough basis. In Mysore too, the present hasty and premature University scheme, without first removing the shortcomings of the elementary education, will hinder rather than promote the progress of true and popular education.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, July 5th, 1916.

66. Referring to the place assigned to Canarese in the Mysore University scheme, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 5th July, remarks that while the mother tongue of 71 per cent of the population of the province including His Highness the Maharaja himself is Canarese, which is besides the official language of the State and the remaining 29 per cent too have a colloquial knowledge of it, and further, when it is to be expected that some of the distinguished graduates of the University will enter the Mysore Civil Service and eventually rise to responsible positions in the State such as that of Assistant Commissioners, to whom a knowledge of the vernacular of the province is of incalculable value, in getting into touch with the people and ascertaining their wants and wishes without having to depend on the services of interpreters, it is curious to find that the proposal to include Canarese composition and translation among the compulsory subjects of the University course did not commend itself to the University Council.

The place of Canarese in the Mysore University Scheme.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, July 5th, 1916.

67. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 5th July, in a lengthy article complaining that the people of Tanjore and other places owning lands irrigated by the Cauvery have renewed their cry against the decision of the arbitrators on the Kannambady Reservoir dispute, reproduces the substance of a previous article by itself on the subject (vide report No. 24, article 43, paragraph 2).

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, July 4th, 1916.

68. Referring to Mr. Chengayya Chetti's interpellation in the Mysore Legislative Council enquiring how many Mysore students there were in the Indian Institute of Science and what subjects they were studying, whether their work at the Institute was satisfactory and whether it was not desirable to grant some scholarships to the research students, the Sambad Abhyudaya, of the 4th July, after giving the councillor Mr. Bannerjea's reply thereto, stating that due provision has been made for the grant of scholarships and that further encouragement will be held out under the University scheme, proceeds to observe:—The students who work in this institute are graduates who do research work in Physics, Chemistry, Geology, etc., so as to promote the economic advancement of the country. The professorial staff, it is needless to say, should also consist of distinguished graduates thoroughly competent to guide the students in such research work. The students are often heard to say that their professors are no better than themselves. The object of the institute can never be achieved if men of average abilities should be appointed as professors as a result of favouritism or influence. If the interpellator had the privilege of submitting a rejoinder, Mr. Chengayya Chetti would have asked whether the patrons of the institute were mindful of these requisites. The Mysore Government will perhaps be unable to give an adequate answer to this question, as the Government of India have an equal share in the administration of the institute. Its patrons, including the sons of the late Mr. Tata and the Bombay Government would naturally be desirous of ensuring its success. If these should address the managing committee regarding its efficient administration, the committee will perforce have to comply with their request. We trust that Mr. Chengayya Chetti's interpellation will be sure to bring about a better management of the institute in the future.

69. In a leader written in English, the Bharata Kesari, of the 1st July, points out that the proposed appointment of two additional Judges in the High Court at Trivandrum is, at this juncture, unnecessary and uncalled for, and records its emphatic protest against it.

70. The Manorama, of the 4th July, points out that the Division Peishkars and Tahsildars are compelling the people of Travancore to subscribe to the new debenture loan, and hopes that the matter will receive the attention of His Highness the Maharaja and his Diwan.

71. The Desabhimani, of the 1st July, points out that the petty police and revenue officers in Travancore are fleecing the people in the interior in the name of the New Debenture Loan, as they did sometime back under the pretence of collecting funds for the war, and hopes that the matter will receive the attention of the Darbar.

72. The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 28th June, writes:—It is not necessary to enlarge upon the fact that the British Empire has received boundless material and moral benefit from the ruling Indian Chiefs. Mr. Asquith and several Cabinet Ministers have publicly acknowledged in Parliament this priceless aid rendered at the present moment and statesmen have under consideration the problem as to how the Chiefs should be treated after the war.

MUKHBIR-I-DAKHAN, Madras, June 28th, 1916.

"A Council of Indian Chiefs."

Mr. Asquith, the Prime Minister, has recently announced that after the war the status of every part of the empire will be revised. It is absolutely certain that the Native States will greatly benefit by the revision.

Recently a correspondent of the London Times has written a lengthy article on this subject in which he says:—"Such mutual relations should be established between the Government of India and the Indian Chiefs, as will ensure their voice being heard in the Councils of the Empire; for the peoples of their States constitute a sixth of the subjects of the King Emperor."

Our readers will remember during the time of Lord Minto the Government of India turned their attention to the problem of relations with Indian Chiefs, but no actual resolution was passed. Again, during the regime of Lord Hardinge a political Secretary was appointed, but the question as to what voice Indian Chiefs could be allowed in the administration was left undecided.

The Times correspondent very correctly observed:—"The Chiefs of India deserve to take part in the administration of Indian affairs, but this does not mean that they want a reward for the assistance they have rendered Britain and the Allies."

Their aspirations are the legitimate outcome of the broad-minded and generous ideas which Lord Curzon gave eloquent expression to on the occasion of the installation of the Nawab of Bhawalpore in 1903. When he said

"The rulers of Indian States are no longer isolated individuals, but partners and colleagues no longer ornaments for kingly palaces but supporting pillars of the fabric of empire."

Five years later, Lord Minto wrote to the Secretary of State for India, suggesting the formation of a Council of Indian Chiefs. "The time has arrived to send this message that in the performance of public and Imperial duties they (Indian Chiefs and Rulers) should be the colleagues and coadjutors of the Governor-General.

Matters have now taken another step forward, a Bill for which Lord Hardinge is chiefly responsible, has been introduced into Parliament. Certain sections of this Bill admit, on legal grounds, the claims of Native States. For example, subjects of Native States are eligible for service and distinctions in British India, and for seats in the Councils. Hitherto subjects of Native States have been regarded as foreigners in British India, but this disability has now been removed. It is hoped that a Council of the rulers of Indian States, which will be competent to assist in dealing with British Indian affairs in their entirety, will soon be found and that it will from time to time give the Governor-General the benefit of its ideas and experience.

Up to the present the Government has been acting upon the suggestions of its members; but these members are mere theorists. The Indian Chiefs, on the other hand, are personal rulers and therefore have personal experience of administration. No Councillor or member can give as sound and as sage advice in political and administrative matters as these self-same Chiefs. The Government would, of course, still retain the theorists for the sake of their theoretical knowledge.

The Times correspondent is of opinion that the members of the Congress, who are, after self-government, will not approve of this Council, but Babu Surandarnath Bannerji, the editor of the Bengali, has supported the proposal in the Imperial Council, and he further says that no Indian politician can oppose the Council of Indian Chiefs.

Subsequently the learned correspondent in discussing the subject of dignity (Izzet) says that Indian Chiefs have often complained that in Imperial Parvanas no regard is had to precedence. Up to 1855 this order was observed, but since then no distinction is made between a ruling prince and a ruling Chief. There are 700 States in India consisting of large and minor States. Under most ruling princes there are ruling Chiefs. The hereditary honour of a salute and knighthood should be limited to ruling princes.

It should be observed that according to the Royal Parvanas, the order in which the ordinary member of the Governor-General's Council, who are entitled to a salute of 15 guns; Governors, Lieutenant-Governors and the Chief Justice of Calcutta stand first and then follow the names and ranks of certain Chiefs. The Times correspondent writes that as Indians are now also appointed to the Councils they may possibly not be equal as regards family, birth, etc., and it is quite certain that the Chiefs will take exception to this order of precedence. Exception in the order of precedence has been made in favour of the Nizam, the Maharajas of Baroda and Mysore.

Finally the correspondent says:—"This and other matters regarding which the Indian Chiefs have a grievance should be decided in accordance with practical commonsense and their rights should be strictly and jealously safeguarded". He observes further if the rights of Indian Chiefs in peace and war are not observed today and they be given no share in the administration of the country, their descendants will lose heart and necessarily become isolated and forget all about their ancestor's loyalty and aid."

We leave the correspondent with his ideas, but we cannot refrain from drawing attention to the fact that at the head of the 700 States of India stands the Nizam's Dominions, the premier State in the country.

How can that be put on a par with States inferior to it in status, power and historic traditions?

If it is intended to extend the rights of certain subordinate States the extension of the rights of the Hyderabad State should form an essential part of any such reform.

All States cannot be regarded as equal in the distribution of Royal honours.

There are, of course, many unnecessary restrictions which should be removed. All India hopes that after the war the political position of the Hyderabad State, whose loyalty and sympathy are admitted by all, will be fully exalted.

II.—Home Administration.

1. The following appears in the West Coast Spectator of the 8th July :— "The report in a recent issue of this paper that a Nayar gentleman of Chirakal had been fired at by some unknown hand by night is certainly disconcerting, coming, as it does, on the top of earlier reports of mysterious shooting cases in parts of South Malabar. It need hardly be said, we suppose, that these mysteries do not spell anarchy of the Bengali type, but none the less, it might be very calamitous for the whole of the district if such outrages are not nipped in the bud. For one thing, they may put new ideas into the heads of professional criminals and thereby render life, especially in sequestered rural areas, much more unsafe than it now is. We have yet to be told, whether the perpetrators of the South Malabar shooting outrages have been run to earth. It would be hard on the law-abiding sections of the public if dastardly crimes like these were to go undetected and unavenged by the law. . . . .

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 8th, 1916.

Mysterious shooting cases.

"The fortunately abortive Chirakal shooting outrage is reported to have taken place at Payyanoor. We now find a Payyanoor correspondent complaining in our vernacular contemporary the Kerala Sanchari that the inhabitants of the neighbouring village of Kanniyan are being terrorised by certain K.D's. of the locality. If this is so, Payyanoor and environs can be described as places it is desirable to give a wide berth. The question is pertinent, we suppose whether our police system has penetrated into the Payyanoor country."

2. In a leader on this subject the West Coast Reformer, of the 9th July, says:—"Our esteemed correspondent "Peace" who describes the somewhat cold relation between the police and the magistrate in Manjeri, refers to a matter of official discipline or etiquette which may appear to be trivial but has a profound significance. The police in this country is invested with enormous powers and important duties, and unless the police is duly subordinated to the magistracy, justice is likely to be diverted from its even course. Instances are not uncommon which would create an impression that police rule often overruns the rule of law so as to damage the essential 'British character' of the administration. Several circumstances have contributed to the superiority of the position taken by the police in this country as compared with that of the subordinate magistracy. One of the circumstances is the fact that Assistant Superintendents and Superintendents of Police are Europeans who naturally command greater influence than the Sub-Magistrates and Deputy Magistrates who are Indians. . . . . It should not be supposed that the higher Police officers or District Magistrates wantonly create the discomfort of the Sub-Magistrates and Deputy Magistrates, but they are unconscious of the effect of their position and action on the subordinate officers who are unable to assert themselves in most cases. . . . . The next point to be considered in the matter of relations between police and magistracy is the disparity of salaries. Circle Inspectors and sometimes even Sub-Inspectors of Police enjoy larger salaries than Sub-Magistrates; and Deputy Superintendents and Assistant Superintendents obtain higher salaries than many Deputy Collector-Magistrates. It is no use denying the fact that difference of salaries implies a corresponding difference of status in the eyes of the public and perhaps of officials also. We might even add that it is highly desirable to have an impressive uniform for clothing the magistracy as well as the police."

3. Referring to the questions asked of Mr. C. Jinarajadasa by the Scotland Yard authorities on his arrival in England, New India, of the 15th July, remarks:—"Mr. Gokhale once complained that the Criminal Investigation Department reported about him things which were untrue. . . . . The people who are most menaced by the Criminal Investigation Department are not the anarchists, but the people, who though engaged in political work, have nothing to conceal. The Criminal Investigation Department are convinced, as they find nothing where nothing is, that these people must be superlatively clever in order to hide so completely their nefarious actions. So, they make up their stories to suit their imagination."

4. New India, of the 12th July, states:—"We are glad Mr. V. Ramesam Pantulu has been appointed Government Pleader, Madras. Mr. Ramesam is a brilliant product of the University, a highly cultured gentleman, and a successful member of the Vakil Bar. He was last year elected a Fellow of the University, and has also been a member of the Cabinet of the Madras Parliament. He is the first Andhra who comes to hold a responsible judicial appointment in the Madras High Court. The choice of Mr. E. R. Osborne for the Public Prosecutorship will also be viewed with general satisfaction by the Bar."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 11th, 1916.

5. The Indian Patriot, of the 11th July, writes:—"Writing on the sanitary improvement of the city of Madras, a local contemporary hazards the valuable opinion that perhaps Madras is not yet ready for it and that the expense is incurred in vain. In another place, Mr. Molony had to his heart's content his full say upon what he sees the people of Madras to be and what, in his opinion, they ought to be. We are very thankful for their advice as to how to close the water tap and dispose of the rubbish. We do not, of course, slight the value of Mr. Molony's appeal to civic conscience; neither do we assert that the Corporation has no grounds for complaint that it is not getting the co-operation which similar institutions in other advanced countries get. . . . . It would be an excellent day, indeed, when the civic conscience was roused in us. But the easiest way to rouse is not by casting reflections on the people whose help and co-operation are required. When it is said that costly sanitary improvements are wasted upon us, it is nothing other than an insult. There is not the least ignorant man in the city who does not prefer the under-ground to the open, stinking, silt-ridden gutter, but when the under-ground drainage converts itself into playing fountains on the public road, there is the protest. We confess that Indian women will not wait for the conservancy carts, neither will they empty the household rubbish into the carts; but when the rule is enforced of a house-to-house dust bin, to be permanently fixed at the door way, whence the conservancy cart man is to remove the contents at his earliest convenience, the Madrasi comes forward to protest. . . . . By all means let us have the benefit of the experience and stimulated civic conscience of the great westerners who draw large salaries and have full conceptions of cleanliness, but let us have peace and no abuse."

A civic conscience.

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 14th, 1916.

6. The Indian Patriot, of the 14th July, remarks:—"The report on the sanitation of the Punjab during the last year contains the familiar enough wail that, while the birth-rate has decreased, the death-rate has gone up. . . . . We have sanitary works, we have Sanitary officers, we have in a miniature everything that London or New York has, but the appalling death-rate, a disgrace to civilisation, is kept up. The Sanitary Conferences have taken up arms against the bug and the mosquito and the rat; scientific treatises have been written and read; the learning and researches of scholars have been rewarded by the grant of titles and money. But what of the effect on the health of the nation of the Sanitary Department? . . . . Allied with sanitation is the poverty of the people. We have still in our midst audacious experts who think that they could make India an ideal country from the sanitary point of view, but only they are afraid of another mutiny. The people are ignorant and persist in living dirtily. . . . . To ask the people to close their wells without providing water-supply; to compel closure of tanks upon which the fields or gardens depend for irrigation; to insist on a mosquito curtain as protection against mosquitoes, to prescribe plenty of pure milk for babies, these are all very commendable measures, but to think that the people who do not at once take note of these wise suggestions are impossible creatures only fit to die, as they do in India, is something monstrous. Mosquito curtain and milk can be had only for money. The poor have no money; and the sanitary problem cannot be solved by circulars from the Commissioners or pamphlets from the experts. . . . . What is wanted is work and not learned disquisitions by learned doctors from Europe. The advent of summer means water scarcity in many parts of India. Wells are dried up in rural areas; municipal towns with protected water supplies fare no better; if anything, they fare worse, for the science expert invariably closes the wells in areas served by the pipe system, as a protection against the mosquitoes."

Sanitation in the Punjab.

(f) Land Revenue and Settlement.

7. New India, of the 10th July, writes:—"We do not know to whom we owe the belated publication of the despatches in consequence of which the Government of India shelved the recommendation of the Royal Decentralisation Commission to enact as a legislative measure the principles of land revenue settlement in India. But we are glad that this has been done, for we are now able to behold, in all its nakedness, the extraordinary theory of State landlordism, by which the Government of India desire to push their claims to land revenue in India. . . . . There are two other circumstances, connected with the despatches which, though they by no means surprise us, indicate the dead-set which the Government of India has made on this question. The first of these is the indecent haste with which the Government of India picked out this particular recommendation of the Decentralisation Commission and gave the quietus to it with the utmost rapidity. . . . . In the next place, every other recommendation of the Commission went and, some are still going, the round of official circumlocution for years before decisions were reached, while the question of village panchayats is still awaiting final settlement amidst the massive reactionary official files. Lastly, we would point to the secrecy maintained on this subject till now, despite questions put in the Council, as showing not only the actual weakness of the case set forth in the despatch, but also showing the dread of His Majesty's Civil Courts on the part of the Revenue officials, of which there is abundant evidence in the despatch, and from which clause one of the new amending Bill of the Government of India Consolidation Act so fully seeks to remove them. . . . . The Government of India despatch on their land revenue policy will be received with considerable disappointment in the country. It is one of the most unconvincing and bureaucratic documents which the Government have in recent years thought fit to publish and from top to bottom it includes assertions which can hardly stand any scrutiny. . . . . In no civilised country are the people prepared to submit to taxation without the sanction of the legislature, and in India the bureaucracy has to justify not only the absence of such sanction, but the denial of any right in the taxed to question the fairness of the assessment before the Law Courts."

New India, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

The land revenue policy of the Government of India.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 10th July, says:—"The despatches are of the year 1910, and it is surprising that they should have been published after the lapse of six years. The questions discussed in the despatch are of the greatest importance, and we can only deplore the growing tendency of the Government to keep from the public documents on which their decisions on important questions are based, or publish them in such a belated fashion. We invite the careful attention of the public to the despatch which, for the series of specious arguments used, is hardly rivalled by any other State paper. . . . . The arguments put forth are really for negation of law and would be read with amazement in other countries. The Government hardly deserve any credit for the satisfaction they derive in regard to the powers of executive orders as to taxation, from the consideration that they have derived them from the old rulers. . . . . We cannot commend the state of mind of the Government which has made them say that the courts of the country are not fit to try and hear revenue cases of the class mentioned by them. It is an unhealthy attitude fraught with the gravest dangers to the rule of law and good Government in India. . . . . The most delicious logic has been reserved to the last. The Government of India seriously told the Secretary of State in 1910 that it was most undesirable 'at the present juncture when the Reformed Councils have just started work', to raise such a complicated and contentious question. We are here furnished with one reason why the despatches were not published earlier and that lay in the subject being considered a controversial one at a time when the Reformed Councils were just starting on their way. We are absolutely unable to understand this sorry exhibition of nervousness at a time when there was no great war to absorb the actitivities of the people. Our wonder is that Lord Morley accepted these fallacious arguments as having enough validity at least to induce him to say that it was inexpedient to adopt the Commission's recommendation at the time. But this is not the only surprise that His Lordship has sprung on the public during his memorable stewardship of India."

Hindu, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

The Indian Patriot, of the 10th July, observes:—"As if we have not enough controversy over the Consolidation Bill, the despatch is now published of the Government of India on the land revenue policy. The arguments of the Government traverse the barren-beaten thoroughfare, and, however much they might be convinced, the public would not take this as the final word. . . . . Every time the screw of the resettlement is driven down, there is a cry; and we do not believe this is a meaningless cry from wealthy people who are unwilling to pay their legitimate dues. . . . . Of course the despatch reads well and the spirit of the executive is unexceptional; but in actual working rules that breathe generosity and consideration are known to work in the opposite direction."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 11th, 1916.

In a further article on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 11th July, remarks:—"The Government of India do not reveal themselves in their Despatch to the Secretary of State on the land revenue policy as particularly strong in their arguments against the recommendation of the Decentralisation Commission that the land revenue settlement should be regulated by provincial legislation, that no settlement should be made without the sanction of the Legislature. . . . . The land revenue question is an old one. It has been discussed from the middle of the last century. The view that the settlement once made with the riot was permanent and unalterable has been abandoned in favour of the arbitrary power of the Government to vary and increase the assessment. For a long time there was no dispute about the title of the ryot, and in the Madras Presidency all the earlier records on the question show beyond mistake the intentions and policy of the Government to have been in favour of permanence. The Government changed its policy because it found it convenient to do so. The reign of law has been displaced gradually by executive discretion in many other cases as well. . . . . It is to be regretted that the Government should be driven to the necessity of seeking refuge in such specious arguments in order to maintain the impossible proposition that executive discretion has so many advantages over the well-considered conclusion of the Legislative Council. The question is not whether the Government should put a limit on its claims, but whether the limit should be fixed by the whim of individuals or according to the deliberate will of the Legislative Council."

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, July 12th, 1916.

The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 12th July, states:—"Six years after sending a despatch on the report of the Decentralisation Commission and the reply of the Secretary of State thereto, the Government of India have been pleased to publish the correspondence on the recommendation made by the Commission that the general principles of assessment, such, for instance, as the proportion of net profits on land which the Government are entitled to take and the period of assessments, should be embodied in provincial legislation instead of being left to executive order. The Government of India oppose the scheme and contrary to their usual practice, they addressed their disapproval direct to the Secretary of State without consulting the Local Governments as they were sure that these would feel as strongly as they do. That no executive will be willing to part with their power is no new experience, but we fail to perceive what object is likely to be served if one after another the more important recommendations of a sufficiently big Commission were to be consigned to the limbo of the lost. . . . . But this summary disposal seems unfair as much to the Decentralisation Commission as to the large body of landholders and ryots whose assessments have been revised and enhanced on no intelligent principle whatsoever.

"If the disposal of the matter is more summary than just, the arguments of the Government of India are in the nature of a special pleading which could not have failed to strike the imagination of a Secretary of State who is not obsessed by the fear of socialistic experiments in Indian administration."

(h) Railways.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 12th, 1916.

State v. Company Management of Railways.

8. New India, of the 12th July, writes:—"The letter from the Railway Board recently published by us on the problem of State v. Private Management of Indian Railways, invites, the reader will have noticed, the opinion of only one section of the people vitally interested in the issue. The Board is anxious to know what the Chambers of Commerce and the Trades Associations have to say, and nowhere is the general public requested to express its views. . . . . The Anglo-Indians who control most of the Chambers of Commerce and the Trades Associations have nothing to lose by the present policy, and they have a chance of making themselves heard by the private companies more easily than by the State. It should not also be lost sight of that the Railway Companies are the worst offenders in India in maintaining the racial bar, in which policy they are greatly interested. . . . . The persons and institutions now consulted are most deeply interested in continuing the present regime, and the Government, instead of asking their opinion, could equally well have brushed aside the Indian claim for the State taking over the management. . . . . Evidently the idea that the Indian railways, built up with Indian money and maintained with Indian revenues, should assist Indian industries, seems revolting to the Anglo-Indian journal; and needless to say, it expresses the opinion of a large section of Anglo-India."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 8th, 1916.

The persecution of New India.

9. The West Coast Spectator, of the 8th July, states:—"The Associated Press and New India are represented in Coimbatore by one and the same correspondent, and it transpires that, while this correspondent was permitted by the Principal of the Forest College to report the recent prize distribution ceremony, at which His Excellency the Governor presided, for the Associated Press, he was told that he would not be permitted to attend and report for New India. The Associated Press did not arrange for a report, so the correspondent renewed his request to be allowed to take a report for New India. The Principal would not relent, and New India had to go without a report. In the circumstances, who can blame our contemporary for using such epithets as audacious, arbitrary, silly and childish. For our part, we consider that the Principal betrayed a churlishness unworthy of his position. Clearly, his manners differ from those 'which stamp the caste of Vere de Vere.'"

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 8th, 1916.

The Cutchery Press Room, Calicut.

10. The West Coast Spectator, of the 8th July, remarks:—"The Collector of Malabar exhibited a fine spirit of enterprise when he opened the Press Room in his office. It will afford him melancholy interest, however, to learn that the new institution is proving of no use whatever to local journalism. Beyond back numbers of one or two gazettes, there is seldom anything to be found about the place, and newspaper men have already ceased visiting a chamber which contains nothing more filling or informing than empty tables and chairs. Perhaps, the Collector will take steps to see that the potentialities of his Press Room are better realised by the journalists."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 8th, 1916.

Anglo-Indian extremists and Home Rule faddists.

11. In a leader under this heading, the West Coast Spectator, of the 8th July, writes:—"Our fear is that the vapid nonsense and silly flapdoodle First Line Beach the Madras Mail and Elgin Road periodically eject might be misconstrued by our countrymen as the views of real Anglo-India, that is of Anglo-Indians whose 'English anchor' still holds. Already we see signs of this misconception in some of our contemporaries who have commenced to retaliate in strong language. One swallow does not make a summer and the croakings of a solitary or a couple of ravens sitting on the withered branch of Anglo-Indian prejudice ought not to be taken seriously. . . . . We have also a word of humble advice for the Home Rule faddist. His ideal is noble no doubt, one that is worth realisation. But no useful purpose can be served by tall talk, by shutting his eyes to the real issues at stake and to practical politics. Every man thinks his own goose a swan, and we can well understand our people thinking that they are fit for Home Rule. Home Rule is a mighty and colossal undertaking, and that being the case, should we not cast our reckonings and bring a certain amount of caution and sense to bear on the examination of all the aspects of the Home Rule question? Are we really fit to govern India to-morrow if all Englishmen, man, woman and child, were to embark at Ballard Pier, Bombay, bidding farewell to India? We put this question plainly and honestly and we want an answer. Our own impression is that we are not. This wholesale departure will no doubt create jubilation; rejuvenescent Mahrattas and released Bengalees might garland each other at the Byculla Club in celebration of the event and perform Matri puja. But what about to-morrow? The Pathan will descend from his mountain stronghold carrying fire and sword; and will Harish Chandra Chatterjee or Ganesh Pant though led by some 'Woman in White', 'She Who Must be Obeyed', bring in sufficient force to check the tornado of rapine that will follow? We have absolutely no patience with this type of men; we have also no patience with those who would rule India themselves, giving charge of the gate to the European soldier. If our misguided and sentimental Home Rule friends would persist indulging in nonsense and impractical ideals, bringing filthy abuse to their aid when they find that people look at them askance, with amusement, they must also be prepared to receive abuse and misrepresentation from the Anglo-Indian extremist. . . . . Can the Government, we also ask, look on unconcernedly while this mutual recrimination, this creation of bad blood and bad feeling is going on? They have the Press Act, the Defence of India Act and several other Acts for the blatant extremist. Have they no weapon to cow down and check the Anglo-Indian extremist? In the case of the former his power to do mischief is limited, he is not taken seriously by the majority of his countrymen and he is noted at his worth. In the case of the latter, however, there is the likelihood of his gibberish being misunderstood as endorsed by Englishmen in India and tacitly approved by the Government. This belief, though unfounded, is apt to filter down to undesirable masses, and the sooner the mischief-makers are silenced the better. If there is to be repression, let there be repression without any distinction being made between class and class."

The defeat of Mr. P. Kesava Pillai.

12. New India, of the 10th July, states:—"We keenly regret to learn that Mr. Kesava Pillai was defeated in the Legislative Council elections for the Bellary group. Mr. Siva Rao is elected. We cannot congratulate the voters on this choice, nor on their throwing away their well-tried servant. The Legislative Council will be much the poorer for the loss of this good and brave defender of the poor. The incident again emphasises the bad nature of the regulations governing the elections." NEW INDIA, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

"Where are human rights?"

13. Writing under this heading, New India, of the 10th July, remarks:—"Anglo-Indians are right in putting a high value on peace and order, for they are freemen, they carry arms, they volunteer; hence peace and order do them no harm. But where a nation is not free, where it lives under coercion, without a free press, liable to imprisonment at the whim of the executive, not allowed to bear arms, peace and order are very doubtful blessings, tending to render more rapid the emasculation of the nation." NEW INDIA, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

The Government of Bombay and Mrs. Annie Besant.

14. Mrs. Besant writes, as follows, in New India of the 10th July:— NEW INDIA, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

"Ave Cæsar.

"The following order was served on me to-day:—

Order.

Whereas in the opinion of the Governor in Council there are reasonable grounds for believing that Mrs. Annie Besant has acted and is about to act in a manner prejudicial to the public safety.

Now, therefore, the Governor in Council in exercise of the powers conferred by Rule 3 of the Defence of India (Consolidation) Rules, 1915, published in the Notification of the Government of India in the Legislative Department, No. 86, dated the 9th December 1915, is pleased to direct that the said Mrs. Besant shall not enter and shall not reside or remain in the Province of Bombay, pending the further orders of Government.

And the said Mrs. Besant is hereby informed that if she knowingly disobeys this order, she will be liable to imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years and will also be liable to fine.

Dated this 29th day of June 1916.

By order of His Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor of Bombay in Council.

L. ROBERTSON,
Secretary to Government.

"This is the explanation of Mr. J. D. Jenkins' belated letter in the Times of India. Some justification was wanted for this order of exclusion, so he suddenly attacked a book sold in Bombay since December last. 'The said Mrs. Besant' will not 'knowingly disobey this order,' because to do so would be the act of a maniac; on the contrary, she respectfully sympathises with the fear of the Governor in Council that she may prejudice public safety, for it must be in very unstable equilibrium if it can be so easily disturbed.

"I wonder it does not strike our rulers that they cannot stop the desire for Home Rule by showing how objectionable is other rule. The more they try to strike me, the more resolved does India become to win freedom from such tyranny. Lord Willingdon has been very slow; I was in the Bombay Presidency at Christmas, and was there for a couple of days in May. And this is July 10th! What a pity I did not go to the press meeting to say 'Good-bye' to my Bombay friends. I would have gone, had I known this was coming!

"I am sorry to see on the order the Royal Arms 'Dieu et mon droit,' 'God and my right'; that is more suitable on my lips than on those of the Bombay Governor in Council. There should be a new escutcheon, Justice gagged, sable and gules, and the legend: 'My strong arm and your wrong'.

"ANNIE BESANT."

HINDU, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 10th July, says:—"We are much surprised at the action of the Governor of Bombay in Council, and are left to speculate in wonderment as to what may be the reasonable grounds for believing that Mrs. Besant has acted and is about to act in a manner prejudicial to the public safety. . . . . Since the war began, Mrs. Besant has preserved an attitude of unswerving loyalty to the British rule, has, we believe, contributed largely to the war fund, and has consistently striven to uphold and aid the cause of the Allies by her writings and speeches. Her policy in this respect is not open to doubt, even where her political views regarding India may have aroused difference of opinion and even hostility. The bulk of intelligent and enlightened Indian opinion has believed in her loyalty and steadfastness to the cause of the Allies, and it would view with extreme regret the order of the Bombay Government taking a different view for undisclosed reasons."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 11th, 1916.

New India, of the 11th July, observes:—"It surely cannot be pretended that Mrs. Annie Besant, against whom the Government of Bombay employs the Defence of India Act, has taken part, is taking part, or intends to take part, in any conspiracies. 'Potential disturbers of the peace may excite the people at large' when there are 'wild rumours flying about.' Of course any one may be a 'potential disturber of the peace' in the eyes of the Criminal Investigation Department, and Lord Willingdon wishes to bar all political discussion, so would regard any political speaker as a 'potential disturber.' Under the pretence that any political discussion may 'excite the people' anyone can be silenced, and we hear from Bombay that the local Government forbids all discussion of its action under the Defence of India Act!

There lies the great difference between such legislation in Great Britain and in India. In Great Britain it is against the deepest instincts of the people, it is resorted to only under dire necessity, and even then its application is jealously watched by Parliament. Here it accords with the instincts of an autocracy, and is used outside the emergencies which were used as an excuse to persuade non-officials to vote for it. Moreover it is used only against Indians, and Anglo-Indians wholly escape from it. However violently they stir up hatred between classes they are safe, whereas if anyone who takes the Indian side quotes historical facts which point to the necessity for Home Rule, he or she can be dealt with arbitrarily and no defence can be made. . . . . There is no doubt that the unjustifiable action taken by the Madras Government against Mrs. Annie Besant has excited feelings of anger and hot indignation throughout India. Many similar acts of injustice have been wrought against other papers and persons, and have passed unnoticed. . . . . The excitement is due to the ill-advised action of the officials, and persistence in that path may crush an individual but it will arouse a nation."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 11th, 1916.

The West Coast Spectator, of the 11th July, writes:—"So, the Government of His Excellency Lord Willingdon has set the Defence of India Act in motion against Mrs. Besant, who, it is ordered, 'shall not enter and shall not reside or remain in the province of Bombay' as she 'has acted and is about to act in a manner prejudicial to the public safety'. Mrs. Besant must be terrible woman, a counterpart of the 'Beautiful White Devil' to compel the Government to bring out of the armoury this 15 incher, the Defence Act! Those of us who saw her at Palghat thought she was a frail, old woman with the gift of the gab! The local Government might have had the reasons, but many of us are inclined to think that they have mistaken a mole hill for a mountain."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 12th, 1916.

In a leader on the Defence of India Act, the Indian Patriot, of the 12th July, remarks:—"After all, we are the people most interested in our country's welfare. We have to remain in the country. We may avail ourselves of any assistance that European friends like Mrs. Besant may render us; but we have to take care that we do not follow anybody beyond the limits of prudence. There may be people with the blood of the martyr in them, but we do not belong to that class, and have no desire to belong to it. We must respect lawful authority. We must render to Cæsar what is Cæsar's. We should not have any hallucination about the result of definance of authority. We should avoid following anybody who walks before us. After all, our own leaders are wiser than the distinguished lady who wishes to lead us to Home Rule. They know the people better than Mrs. Besant who has not the patience to leave the people to their own inclinations, to the dictates of their own judgment. . . . . It will be well for the best interests of the country if Mrs. Besant gives up her political activity for a time. It is clear that she can do us no good by stirring up feeling at this time. Nobody, no responsible man, is in a mood to listen to her. At the same time the action of the Bombay Government shows beyond mistake that the Government apprehends evil consequences from stirring up popular feeling when the war is proceeding."

The Karnataka, of the 12th July, states:—"No loyal citizen of the British Empire and no genuine supporter of British Rule in India can help feeling unspeakable regret and surprise at the turn which the relations of the Government with Mrs. Annie Besant have been taking within the past two months. So far as the public are aware, Mrs. Annie Besant has always been one of the staunchest advocates of loyalty; and if she has valiantly fought for the cause of Home Rule in India, she has also sought to interpret the best mind of Great Britain in matters pertaining to nationality and liberty and thus to strengthen the people's confidence in the British race. Whether she would,—and how she could,—act in a manner prejudicial to public safety are questions to which the ordinary public have hitherto seen no reason to reply in unfavourable term; and unless and until fresh facts are placed before them pertaining to her recent activities, they will not be able to understand the justice of the order of the Bombay Government."

KARNATAKA, Bangalore City, July 12th, 1916.

The West Coast Reformer, of the 12th July, observes:—"Mrs. Annie Besant has been prohibited from entering or residing in the province of Bombay! The news will be received throughout India with deep regret and resentment though not with much surprise. Evidently the authorities are not going to leave her alone with her speeches and writings and political organisations. . . . . There is, perhaps, some reason for surprise in the fact that it is the Government of Bombay, and not that of India or of Madras, that has taken this action against Mrs. Besant. This leads us to think that her speeches at Poona and her organisation of the Home Rule League with the Tilak party in that Presidency were probably the 'reasonable grounds' for the opinion and belief of the Government of Bombay about her, but it is difficult for the general public to believe that she has acted and intends to act in such a manner as to endanger the 'public safety'."

WEST COAST REFORMER, Calicut, July 12th, 1916.

In a further article on this subject, the Hindu, of the 13th July, says:—"Not only has the Bombay Government issued a prohibitory order under the Defence of India Act against Mrs. Besant directing her not to enter the Bombay Presidency, but it has also, we learn, asked the journals in Bombay not to comment upon the same. This apparently accounts for the fact that while the journals, Indian and Anglo-Indian, of Bengal, the Punjab and other places have expressed their opinions on the Bombay Government order, the Bombay journals have refrained from saying anything. This muzzling of the press in Bombay and its quiet submission to it is as curious and wonderful a phenomenon in Indian politics as the order forbidding entry to Mrs. Besant in the Bombay Presidency. Without any reasons assigned and at one stroke the Bombay Government has taken an action which strikes at the root of the most fundamental rights of British citizens. It has curtailed the personal freedom of Mrs. Besant, and has also curbed the liberty of the press in Bombay. . . . . We must frankly say that it is in the highest degree injudicious and impolitic that the Indian Government should resort to despotic or autocratic methods in its endeavour to facilitate the success of the Allies in the war. . . . . We fear that the agents of the Government in some places become the victims of hallucination in regard to the attitude and actions of certain people. . . . . The whole matter is a fitting subject for a careful investigation by His Excellency Lord Chelmsford who is said to be well versed and much interested in constitutional law and forms of Government."

HINDU, Madras, July 13th, 1916.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 15th, 1916.

New India, of the 15th July, states:—"We salute the Dnyan Prakash of the Servants of India Society for a courage worthy of the great Founder of the order. Every Province except Bombay is discussing and condemning the order of the Presidency Government. Bombay is silent, under the Governor's command—a command which we believe to be unjustified by law. But this gallant paper ignores the arbitrary inhibition of discussion, and publishes a strong and outspoken article, clear, logical and convincing. We wish we could stand beside our gallant contemporary, and share the risk it has faced. But that privilege is reserved for the Bombay papers. The Mahratta spirit has evidently not been cowed by the sight of Bal Gangadhar Tilak's long and cruel sufferings, and where the sight of suffering for righteousness sake does not cow, there it inspires."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 11th, 1916.

15. New India, of the 11th July, has the following:—"The Secretary of State for the Colonies says that the Imperial and Dominion Governments are 'seriously considering the question of an Imperial Council'. Over and over again have we urged on our readers the imminence of the reconstruction of the empire, and the danger that India would be excluded. We are now told that the question is under 'serious consideration,' and that, during the war. Yet Lord Willingdon asks India to do nothing—until too late. Naturally the Governments, who wish to keep India asleep while her fate is being decided, object to the Home Rule tomtom and its persistent player. They are angry that the breach in the Congress has been closed, and that the Congress and the Muslim League are uniting, and they regard Mrs. Besant as the 'mischievous and even dangerous' worker most responsible for these results, so pregnant with hope for India's future. So she must be silenced, if possible, and the circle round her must gradually close in, like the room in Poe's nightmare. But all these good people forget that all their movements are turned to use by the Great Player, who 'makes the wrath of man to' subserve His game."

India and the proposed Imperial Council.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 11th, 1916.

16. In an article under the heading "A Dangerous Agitation", New India, of the 11th July, states:—"For some time past, some Anglo-Indian journals, assisted by a few Tory papers in England, have been trying to make out that the Indian military charges are far less than they should be. . . . . As usual with those critics, that success has influenced them only to cry for more money, and every stray utterance or letter in India or England is utilised to preach a sermon on Sir William Meyer's miserliness. The latest occasion has been furnished by a letter in the Morning Post, from a correspondent in India, presumably from the Calcutta or Karachi Anglo-Indian coteries, in which is made the sweeping and unthinkable condemnation that 'there is hardly any branch of the military and medical work in Mesopotamia which has not been ruined by the refusal of some part of the money required to make it work. . . . . It will be remembered that some time ago, a hue and cry was raised on the ground that undescribable misery was caused in Mesopotamia by the shortage of medical supplies. And the Englishman, assisted by some other journals of the same tendency, constantly dinned into our ears that Sir William Meyer was responsible for the shortage. It is now known that the trouble, extremely slight in character, was due largely to shortage of transports and that the supplies at Basra were abundant. Has the Englishman been punished for all the angry feelings it aroused? All the same, the howl is being kept up. And the demand is not for remedying the defects, such as those in transport affairs, but only for more Indian money; and if anybody says anything has gone wrong, these Anglo-Indian critics know the cause: 'Sir William Meyer did not give the money and Lord Hardinge shielded him.' And the tragedy of it is that the critics in question are permitted to continue their mischief without any action on the part of the Government—a freedom which they refuse to Indian editors even with reference to domestic matters."

India's Military expenditure.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 13th, 1916.

The Englishman v. New India.

17. The following appears in New India of the 13th July:—"The Englishman prints the following disgraceful suggestion on our comment on the 'Eye-witness' describing his sufferings from flies. 'Is the suppression due to a dislike to advertise any British military achievements?' Our readers know how we have printed and praised the work of the army and of individual soldiers, but the soldiers who face heat and cold with equal heroism do not complain that they had to lie naked in a tent with the flies up because of the heat. The description was not of the achievements of soldiers, nor of the sufferings of troops, but of the sufferings of the 'Eye-witness'. The paragraph contains also an incitement to violence that, if directed by New India against a Government official, would lead to confiscation. But the Englishman may do anything from abusing a Viceroy to inciting 'infuriated privates' to visit New India offices, secure in its immunity either to incite to violence or to tell lies, despite the Press Act."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 13th, 1916.

The Times of India and Mrs. Besant.

18. New India, of the 13th July, writes:—"Similar recklessness as to truth is shown in an anonymous letter to the Times of India, stating that Mrs. Besant has revived the mediæval idea that the flesh is gross, whereas we need a 'sound mind in a sound body'; this is written of the advocate of games, of drill, of fencing and wrestling, who carried the advocacy into practice in the Central Hindu College and all schools she influences, and has lectured over and over again to school and college youths of the essential need of sound and robust bodies and how to train them. . . . . We wonder a paper of the standing of the Times of India prints anonymous falsehoods of this kind; but after all, it is Anglo-Indian, and any stick is good enough with which to beat one who works for Home Rule for India. At all cost of truth she must be discredited, in order to protect Lord Willingdon from public condemnation, and justify his action."

HINDU, Madras, July 14th, 1916.

Home Rule for India.

19. The Hindu, of the 14th July, writes:—"We have published elsewhere some interesting extracts received by the English mail to-day relating to the subjects of Home Rule in India and of a Council of Federation for the British Empire. All the signs of the times point to the fact that the subject of Home Rule or a scheme of self-government for India can no longer be derided as a visionary ideal, and that it has no relation to practical politics. . . . . The London Times has attacked the League in vehement terms as a mischievous movement, and its attitude is not surprising in view of its prolonged and unceasing antagonism to the Home Rule scheme even in Ireland. In the heat of its anger, however, the Times, while denouncing some statements in the leaflet as untrue, makes astounding untrue statements in regard to India's contribution to the war. It makes, for instance, the assertion that 'the Indian revenues have not contributed a rupee to the cost of the war.' This is a suggestio falsi of the most egregious description. . . . . If India has, in the words of the Finance Member, given to the full of what she possessed, how can she do more? That she is not able to bear as large a share of the financial burden, necessitated by the war on the empire as some Anglo-Indians wish her to bear, is doubtless due to her low economic and financial position."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 15th, 1916.

The Legislative Council elections.

20. In the second article under the heading "The Moral of the Elections," the West Coast Spectator, of the 13th July, observes:—"As we said in our last leading article, the general elections must set every enquiring mind athinking. We have to consider—and for the matter of that every Indian who takes a sensible view of Indian politics in its present stage of evolution has to consider—whether we are sufficiently awake to our duties and responsibilities as to deserve complete control of the administrative machinery. . . . . We have far advanced, our political progress has been remarkably rapid and enduring, but we must admit that the pace at which we are proceeding does not, however, admit of an immediate grant of autonomy. . . . . Our reformed councils have no doubt proved effective instruments for the ventilation of our political wants and demands, but the recent elections have eloquently pointed out that they are yet in their early stages, indiscriminately recruited, and the electorate an inert, irresponsible mass, constituting mere pawns on the chess board of scheming politicians and self-seeking individuals. . . . . Under the present state of affairs, popular representation is but a mockery, a huge, pretentious sham, and he is the 'popular' representative who has a long, well-filled purse, who knows to shuffle his cards very well and to call into help all those black arts which the scheming, self-seeking Indian politician considers his especial property. . . . . It is rather to be regretted that Mrs. Besant, who is beating the big Home Rule drum and courting martyrdom, with a noble purpose, no doubt, has not given any thought to those aspects of the question we have ventured to discuss briefly in the foregoing lines."

New India, Madras, July 15th, 1916.

The haughty tyrannical Anglo-Indian.

21. Writing under the heading "By what it feeds on," New India, of the 15th July, says:—"The injury done to a man's character by arbitrary and irresponsible power is the chief cause of the difference between the English and the Anglo-Indian. Both are of the same splendid stock, both come from a race that has lived and died, fought and suffered for Freedom. The Englishman comes here with all his brave and free instincts growing within him. He is given irresponsible power over other men, he is courted, treated with subservience by his elders and superiors because of that power, and he gradually deteriorates, and becomes the haughty, tyrannical Anglo-Indian."

III.—Legislation.

Hindu, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

The Government of India Amendment Bill.

22. The Hindu, of the 10th July, writes:—"No candid person can deny that the demand for Home Rule or self-government in India has been immeasurably strengthened by the introduction of the Government of India Amendment Bill in the House of Lords containing provisions which have evoked universal protest from Indians and Anglo-Indians alike from all parts of British India. That a piece of momentous legislation of this sort has been conceived, introduced and is likely to be passed over the heads of the vast population of India without their having been even acquainted with its provisions, until a very late stage, is the strongest condemnation of the system of Government under which they now live. . . . . One cannot but feel indignant at the shabby manner in which the people of this country and their interests have been treated in this matter. The measure in question is bereft of all the true elements of legislation so far as the people of this country are concerned. . . . . It is scarcely necessary to enter into the merits in detail of the proposed legislation. There is no gainsaying the fact that they are of a highly contentious and controversial character. It is either sublime ignorance of the nature of the legislation or sovereign indifference to the views and interests of the people of India that has induced the India Office authorities to introduce the measure. In any case, as things now stand, a wide yawning gulf is disclosed separating the Government from the people even in respect of matters vitally affecting their interests, a state of things much to be deplored."

New India, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 10th July, says:—"The Secretary of State for India has thrown to the winds the doctrine of the avoidance of political controversy during the war, for we must hold him responsible for the egregious Government of India Amendment Bill, the attempt to slip which through Parliament unnoticed has proved so disastrous a failure. Only the other day the Governor of Bombay was preaching non-controversy during the war, serenely indifferent to the fact that the United Provinces Government had introduced and forced through the Legislative Council the most contentious Municipalities' Bill, setting the Provinces afire by fanning the dying embers of the Hindu-Mussalman disagreements, and that the Imperial Government was, in a most unnecessary hurry, trying to rush through the Imperial Parliament a specimen of the most controversial legislation."

IV.—Native States.

23. The Karnataka, of the 8th July, writes:—"We cannot persuade ourselves to congratulate Diwan Bahadur Mr. J. S. Chakravarti, the trusted Financial Secretary to our Government, on the statement that he has been able to place before the public regarding the transactions made during the year 1915–16 and those expected during the year 1916–17. . . . . Before we proceed to an examination of the figures furnished, we may remark that this year's speech of the learned Financial Secretary differs from that of the previous year in being briefer, less sententious and also less frank. . . . . May we also ask why the publication of the Appropriation Report has been delayed this year? It was this very same Financial Secretary that 'emphasized,' on the previous occasion, 'the fact that a careful study of the Appropriation Report is sure to furnish any intelligent reader with abundant materials for rational criticism in connection with the financial policy of Government.' . . . . The said report was published last year in May, and may we suppose that the delay this time is due to the Financial Secretary's mental pre-occupation with other schemes, in fields other than financial?"

KARNATAKA, Bangalore City, July 8th, 1916.

The Mysore Financial Statement.

24. The West Coast Spectator, of the 11th July, has the following:—"The Diwan's reply to the Thiyya deputation that recently waited on him at Trichur and which we published in our last issue must be regarded as most disappointing. Mr. Bhore practically admits the disabilities complained against by the Thiyya leaders, but puts in a special plea, so to say, for the continuance of those illogical and irrational bars which the Thiyya rightly protests against. Policy of State seems to be the difficulty that stands in the way of the total abolition of the bars sinister that must gall the spirit of any self-respecting individual.

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 11th, 1916.

The Cochin Government and the Thiyyas.

"The Darbar cannot take shelter behind the plea of religious neutrality, for, the royal seal has been set upon many a provokingly annoying social custom. For instance we have only to call attention to the interdict on cropped heads and women's petticoats. That being the case we are tempted to think that the continuance of the disabilities bears eloquent testimony to the fact that a State, however progressive in its views on governance, can assume a narrow, clannish and retrograde attitude towards social questions and customs.

"The spectacle of a Christian Diwan, a member of the heaven-born service, pleading helplessness and inability to save a community from degradation is sorry indeed. We cannot, however, quarrel with him. His is but a secondary position, and he has to take orders from his employer. We have already seen the breadth of vision the employer, the Raja, can bring to bear on the solution of socio-political questions. We are, therefore, sorry for our Thiyya brethren in Cochin State whose chance and salvation seem to lie in turning renegades to a society and a religion that treat them like veritable Yahoos, that refuse to allow them the elementary rights of humanity. And Hinduism is broad and tolerant! See the irony of the thing!"

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 15th, 1916.

Education in Cochin.

25. The Indian Patriot, of the 15th July, states:—"In his letters on the state of education in Cochin, the second and last of which we publish to-day, our well-informed correspondent lets in day-light into a situation that must rouse every Cochinite to strongly demand that this suicidal policy shall cease at once and without the least delay. It requires no commission of enquiry, no report of committees, no promulgation of circulars, to know where the danger lies and what the remedy should be. If young boys in Cochin State have to cross the border and seek British schools for education, it is a serious scandal which His Highness should to-morrow order shall cease. . . . . What is done is done, but it lies with His Highness to arrest this exodus of boys outside the State. It is cruel that the State should have roused in the people a thirst for education and then denied education to them. Has the subject of His Highness no right to learn? Has he to find that right outside the border? . . . . . His Highness must now interfere, order that the by-way slaughter houses of primary and lower secondary shall cease from this year and that boys may satiate their thirst for learning without any unnatural restrictions. . . . . The Cochin Educational authorities are driving away youths by the too severe tests at the primary and the lower secondary stages. We make a special appeal to His Highness, who, after all, is the only permanent factor in the administration, to see to the proper development of education. . . . . It is absolute indifference and criminal negligence of the interest of the State to be content with a hundred boys in the high school, and look blindly on the streams of young exiles beyond the border. The State must start more schools, or it must afford special facilities for private enterprise. . . . . We sincerely appeal to His Highness to take this educational question into his hands. Cochin leads India in education; it will soon cease to lead if the present suicidal policy is pursued."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

26. In its leader headed "the British offensive", the Kistnapatrika, of the 8th July, has the following remarks:—To-day tons of ammunitions are manufactured in every village in England and the British could begin a strong offensive. When the first line of the enemy's trenches had been pounded by their artillery, regiment after regiment dashed forward and captured village after village, and the French have been exerting equal pressure on the enemy's lines. The Germans had to desert the villages in their front and retire to behind positions in the rear which were strongly fortified for their defence; but it appears that the Germans were prepared for this attack with a fore-knowledge of it. The War Intelligence Committee themselves publish that the tenacity and military skill of the Germans on this occasion is admirable. It appears that they allow the British to approach them, and suddenly emerge from some concealed positions in their trenches to oppose them, that these concealed positions extend to a depth of 40 feet and are hidden from the view of the British, that at first a handful of Germans come out and show the white flag and that, when the British armies advance to take them prisoners, German regiments suddenly make their appearance as if from the bowels of the earth and begin to work havoc with their bayonets. Undaunted by the fierceness of such situations, and with a courage that nothing could damp the English soldiers pressed forward dealing destruction among the enemy's ranks, and have shown a prowess that will live for long in the memory of the coming generations. The results of this prowess will not be revealed so soon; they may become more tangible next week.

British offensive.

Kistnapatrika, Masulipatam, July 8th, 1916.

27. The Ravi, of the 6th July, says:—Germany and Austria know that the strength of their armies now is much more than what it was formerly. They also know that the armies of the Allies are daily growing in strength. A terrible fight is imminent and there will be a terrible loss of life. This is the last great attempt. We trust that victory will be ours.

The war.

Ravi, Cocanada, July 6th, 1916.

28. The Manorama, of the 11th July, disapproves of the recent statement of Mr. Tennant in Parliament regarding the employment of Indian troops in this war, which, according to it, can never lead to any misunderstanding on the part of the Germans as to the power and resources of Great Britain.

The war and the Indian army.

Manorama, Calicut, July 11th, 1916.

29. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 6th July, writes:—While Germany was wasting her munitions in fruitless attacks on a limited length on the eastern and the western fronts some people wanted to know why Great Britain did not simultaneously begin her offensive on her front. Later they commenced to understand for themselves that it was the farsighted policy of Britain that prevented her from sacrificing the lives of her brave soldiers like Germany. In the meantime they obtained a sufficient supply of munitions and the gallant army and a loyal people were anxious to show their bravery; directly they were satisfied with the quantity of munitions at their disposal and then Great Britain began a great and formidable offensive.

"The commencement of Britain's powerful offensive."

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, July 6th, 1916.

The writer says that when the Allied attacks reach their maximum, Germany will assuredly be battered to pieces. The bloodthirsty Kaiser will understand that disgrace and defeat are the result of an unjust war and the responsibility for sacrificing the lives of hundreds of thousands of God's creatures will be on the heads of the Kaiser and the Crown Prince.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, July 7th, 1916.

30. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 7th July, writes:—It has frequently been experienced that Germany has on several occasions gained her object by deluding her friends by holding out to them false hopes of gain and subsequently abandoning them to despair. On the other hand, the British Government, which is taking so prominent a part in helping the Allies, never forsakes them. For instance take the case of Russia and France to whom the British Government has rendered great help. It is Great Britain which permitted the inhabitants of Belgium to take refuge in her territory and is still rendering assistance to Serbia and Montenegro. Through her alone, Japan, which was at war with Russia, is now enjoying the advantage of her confidence.

"Russia and Japan".

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

31. The Qaumi Report, of the 10th July, has a leader on the marginally-noted subject which says:—The displeasure and abhorrence expressed in the mass meetings of Mussalmans at the impious action of the Sharif of Mecca are no secret.

The rising in Mecca.

The matter is known to Mussalmans. They should ask their feelings and their intelligence as to how the predictions of the True Apostle (on whom be peace) are being fulfilled by such events and how the signs of the nearness of Judgment Day are becoming manifest. He who is familiar with the Traditions will remember at least the following Tradition of Abū Daūd:—"Mussalmans will shortly lay siege to Madina which will be their remote fortified position" (Abū Daūd, Vol. IV, page 91).

Mussalmans are not disheartened nor is their steadfastness shaken, nor their peace disturbed by all these occurrences. Their believing heart has not been seduced by man or devil. The educated class among the Mussalmans, the guardians of religious and secular matters, are behaving very wisely and cleverly. Those gentlemen have never allowed the community to become down-hearted. In every matter they have sacrificed feelings, reason; in fact their personal dignity and advantage in order to prevent the community from being carried away by revolt or passion.

For instance in regard to this disagreeable affair Mussalmans who understand the trend of the times and are the guardians of the Faith have, in special meetings and at Anjumans, denounced the procedure of the Sharif of Mecca as opposed to the sentiments of Islam and that God and the Apostle have threatened the perpetrators of such deeds with punishment.

It is true those meetings and Anjumans were limited and restricted. The secret is known to us, to the Government and to all those who have any political sense. Our local contemporary, the Madras Mail, does not know, or at least pretends not to know and regards with contempt, such Anjumans and meetings and occasionally, with a view to decreasing the dignity and making them appear unimportant, points out that such meetings are held in a corner. Sometimes the taunt is that but a few persons attend the meetings. The gist of its political logic is that all the meetings hitherto held were of no consequence as the public took no part in them and only a very few persons gave expression to their views.

This taunt of our contemporary the Madras Mail persuades, as it were, in an undertone that Mussalmans should hold big revolutionary meetings so that we may admit that the opinion expressed undoubtedly represents public opinion or that of the Mussalmans in general. Excellent!:

> They are making counter-complaints and with what coyness!
> They make their complaint of weakness an excuse for cruelty!

Probably the Anglo-Indian papers do not wish this, but if it is their desire that the generality of Mussalmans may become stirred up and excited over important matters, they are in grievous error. We and all dignified Mussalman leaders desire and endeavour to take into our own hands matters connected with the generality of Mussalmans, and to express our opinion in a constitutional manner and in case of absolute necessity. We advise our Anglo-Indian friends not to have recourse to the logic of which the following will be the outcome:—

"Bull! come and gore us."

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

32. The Andhrachandrika, of the 6th July, remarks:—It has become a practice with the Government to pay high salaries to high officers and not to pay even a living wage to those occupying the lower rungs of the ladder. It is, therefore, that the ordinary Indians are poor while the Europeans are rich. In every department there are many unnecessary posts, which are a burden on the tax-payer. While we are gratified that the constables pay has been raised, we submit that the authorities have done only very little towards reforming the Police department There is no need for the existence of the Criminal Investigation Department, which creates animosity between the rulers and the ruled. While in other countries the Police are the protectors of the people, here they are a terror to them. They should recognise that their business is to maintain public peace and not to exercise undue authority on the people. The Police Department has earned a notoriety in the eyes of the people for entertaining wicked persons. This opinion of the people must change before any reform can be said to have its desired effect.

Andhrachandrika, Proddattur, July 6th, 1916.

The Police department.

Referring to the increased expenditure of four lakhs of rupees in the Police Department, which has been sanctioned with a view to attracting respectable people to it, the Kerala Patrika, of the 8th July, fails to understand why only the constables in certain districts should have their pay increased, and why an allowance of one rupee, sanctioned in the case of the constables in Tuticorin, Negapatam and Madura, is not granted to those in other districts, inasmuch as the prices of foodstuffs have increased all over the Presidency. It expresses its doubt as to whether honest, respectable and educated persons will care to join the department, unless and until the higher officers have changed their attitude and behaviour towards their subordinates, besides the pay of the constables being increased, and calls for reforms in this direction.

Kerala Patrika, Calicut, July 8th, 1916.

The Police department.

33. Referring to the assassination of Criminal Intelligence Department officers, the Kerala Patrika, of the 8th July, says:—It is surprising that the Criminal Intelligence Department officers have not yet been able to detect the perpetrators of these crimes. It is not known how the anarchists manage to get possession of guns. It is to be thought that it was the Germans that supplied them with these weapons. If, when the Arms Act was brought into force, its application had been extended to Europeans also, instead of its being confined to Indians, these anarchists would not have come by so many guns. At any rate it is regrettable that our country men should resort to such anarchical deeds at this juncture. Not only the Bengalees, but also the people in other parts of the conntry, will do well to remember the recent speech of His Excellency Lord Carmichael at the Legislative Council, in which His Excellency observed that he would not hesitate to employ the special as well as the ordinary laws of the country to put down these crimes.

Kerala Patrika, Calicut, July 8th, 1916.

The assassination of Criminal Intelligence Department officers.

(d) Education.

34. The Lokopakari, of the 3rd July, pities the large number of students who fail in the University examinations every year and remarks:—It looks as if the University is wantouly preventing a large number of students from passing its examinations. Of the 145 students who appeared for the School Final examination in the Madura College, only 14 passed. This is the case with every school and college. The difficulties of the students in having education have become great. The school fees have gone up a good deal. The text-books are being changed every year. An age limit has also been fixed for the students appearing for the School Final examination. All these restrictions create a doubt in the minds of the people whether it is the object of the Government that they should not have much of education. If this is not the case, the Government should lose no time in preventing the high-handed acts of the University.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 7th, 1916.

The health of pupils.

35. The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th July, says:—Medical officers have examined the health of schoolmasters and pupils in Bombay and found that 30 per cent of them are underfed. In the civilised countries of the west the Governments give pupils at least one meal a day. The Maharaja of Baroda also is doing this charity. But in the British territory, the Government plead want of funds when the subject of education is moved.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 8th, 1916.

The Intermediate examination.

36. The Andhrapatrika, of the 8th July, says:—The recent Intermediate examination was no test. It was an act of gambling that led to unbearable troubles. Disappointment pervades the whole atmosphere. Depression marks the face of every student. Will the Fellows of the University still indulge in sleep? That is impossible. There is to be a special meeting of the senate on the 21st. The resolutions that are to be moved there are reasonble, and the Senate cannot but consider them. It is the undue importance given to the English language that has brought about the present difficulties. The University cannot be reformed until the experts in English give up their hobby. What our students want is knowledge and mental development, and not a close acquaintance with the minute details of a foreign tongue.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 11th, 1916.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 11th July, says:—In the recent Intermediate examination, a student got 49 per cent in vernacular composition, 46 in ancient history, 48 in modern history, and 50 in logic. He failed to get 40 per cent in English, but got more than 35 per cent. Does he deserve to be plucked for this? Should he waste another year and study in the same class at a heavy cost? Who will not pity him? Another student failed to secure the required marks only in physics. But it is deplorable he is to study all the other subjects also again for the examination. The authorities of the Presidency College in which he had been reading told him that there was no seat available for him in that college. No other college could provide him with a seat. Physics is a subject requiring practical training. Is he to give up his studies after incurring so much expense? The Government should ameliorate the present condition of students by introducing the compartmental system, by lightening the burden of the English language, and by seeing that more colleges are opened.

MALAYALI, Quilon, July 8th, 1916.

The Intermediate examination results.

Referring to the extremely bad results of the recent Intermediate examination, the Malayali, of the 8th July, that thinks these should be attributed more to the cruelty and hard-heartedness of the examiners, who like to make a display of their knowledge and capacity by selecting difficult questions, than to any deterioration on the part of the students, or to their indiscriminate admissions to colleges by their Principals, but commends the decision of the Senate of the Madras University to hold a special meeting of it for the purpose of enquiring into the causes of these disastrous results, and doing the needful in the matter.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, July 11th, 1916.

Referring to the same subject, the Keralodayam, of the 11th July, writes in a strain more or less similar to the above, and adds that it is the bounden duty of the Senate to redress the grievances of the candidates of the last Intermediate examination, the disastrous results of which have created quite a sensation not only in the student world but throughout the Presidency. The paper is also of opinion that it cannot but be a boon to the students, if the compartment system of the English Universities be introduced here also at least in the case of the Intermediate examination, and it hopes that this matter will receive the attention of the University authorities.

SASILEKHA, Madras, July 7th, 1916.

Elementary schoolmasters.

37. The Sasilekha, of the 7th July, refers to the low pay of Elementary schoolmasters in India, and remarks that such is the inevitable result of unlimited salaries being paid to Europeans in India.

38. Referring to the Hon'ble Dr. Banerjea's proposal before the Imperial Legislative Council, urging that the opinions of the Provincial Governments should be invited on the question of creating a new class of medical practitioners who receive their instruction through the medium of the vernacular, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 7th July, says:—Although it is impossible to gainsay the fact that considering the needs of the masses of rural population in India a larger number of practitioners is indispensible and the proposed new class of practitioners ought certainly to be better than the large number of existing quacks, it is curious that a similar resolution on the same subject in the Madras Legislative Council recently was accepted by Government with the amendment that it would be more convenient to impart the instruction through the English language. It may be true that instruction through the medium of English would be more convenient. But this is not a question of convenience. If any revival of the indigenous system of treatment is intended, it is imperative that such instruction should be through the medium of the vernacular and based on the ancient ayurvedic books. The Bengal Government recognise the need for a large number of practitioners following the indigenous system. It is extremely strange that the Madras Government alone should incline to the view that instruction through English would be better.

Medical instruction in the vernacular.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 7th, 1916.

Referring to the proposal to give medical instruction through the medium of the vernaculars, the Sasilekha, of the 7th July, says:—Under the British rule the study of indigenous medicine has declined like all other studies of ours. The western system of medicine is unsuited to India whose climatic conditions differ widely from those of the west. The Government will therefore do well to give up the idea of opening vernacular medical schools, and establish Ayurvedic and Unani schools in their stead.

Vernacular medical schools.

SASILEKHA, Madras, July 7th, 1916.

Referring to a circular sent round to the local Governments by the Government of India asking them to consider and report upon the advisability of imparting instruction in the vernaculars on western medicine, the Hindu Nesan, of the 6th July, thinks that, though the proposal of the Government of India may lead to a large increase in the number of doctors, trained in western medicine, who can be really useful in villages, it will close the doors against Ayurvedic and Unani doctors, who are now having a good practice in rural parts, and prays the Government of India not to take any step, which will even indirectly prejudice the interests of the Ayurvedic and Unani doctors.

Medical instruction in vernaculars.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 6th, 1916.

Referring to the Government of India circular on medical instruction in the vernaculars, the Andhrapatrika, of the 7th July, remarks that the establishment of vernacular medical schools will not only give a greater number of medical practitioners to the public, but will also encourage the advancement of the vernaculars. It trusts that the Local Government will not set back the wheel of progress by adopting the opinions of some Educational officers.

Vernacular medical schools.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 7th, 1916.

Referring to the circular of the Government of India on the subject of imparting medical instruction in the vernaculars, the Manorama, of the 7th July, points out that it is a sure sign that the Government themselves have been convinced of the inadequacy of medical aid given to the people in the interior parts of the country, and regrets that a resolution, similar to the one moved by Dr. Banerjea in the Imperial Legislative Council, should have been rejected by the Madras Government, whose reply, however, to the circular, will, it is to be hoped, be in accordance with public opinion on the subject.

Medical instruction in the vernaculars.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 7th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Keralodayam, of the 11th July, rejoices that the Government are alive to the necessity of providing medical aid to the poor people in the interior parts of the country, but doubts whether, instead of trying to improve the native systems of medicine and make them useful to the public, it is proper or advisable to create a number of quacks by imparting instruction in the western system of medicine by means of the vernaculars, and observes that it is the duty of the Government to provide for the teaching of both the systems, and that the Provincial Governments may be given a free hand to take such measures as may, in their opinion, be suitable to the needs of the country.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, July 11th, 1916.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 7th, 1916.

Female education.

39. In an article referring to the recent Government of India circular to all the provinces inviting suggestions on the question of female education in consultation with local bodies and also private gentlemen and ladies competent to give their opinion on the subject, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 7th July, says:—Female education at present is largely in the hands of Christian Missionaries and even in institutions managed by local bodies, the teachers are mostly Christians. Very naturally the children imbibe Christian views and Christian ideas. If the rock of Hindu faith has hitherto successfully withstood the waves of other religions, it is because of the absolute firmness of the matron at home. But even rocks must give way under an unceasing onslaught and already where the modern type of education has made some progress among girls, there is a good deal of levity exhibited in regard to the sacred traditions of the past and at the same time a gradual loosening of the family ties of the ancient patriarchal system. Each one exists for himself, his wife and children and has seldom any thought for the other members of his family. The Gains of Learning Bill which was on the point of being passed into law if His Excellency Sir Arthur Havelock had not withheld his assent thereto, and now again the Hindu Co-parcener's Bill which frees a member of an undivided family from all subsequent liabilities on the family property the moment he declares his intention to effect partition before a Registrar—both these are indicative of a tendency at the present day to dissolve the strong bonds of family life which were characteristic of the olden times. Those qualities, such as dominating self-interest, hanging on to others and self-will which have been too markedly developed among our men as a result of modern education will doubly exhibit themselves in our girls, if the same type of education is imparted to them. Domestic peace will more and more disappear and the old order of things will be completely upset. Domestic life, in short, will be completely revolutionised. We cannot say whether the Christian community has found peace and contentment in the present system. They adopted the western modes and western education more rapidly than the rest. If they had stopped to enquire how far these changes would add to their domestic felicity we may be sure that they would not have plunged so headlong into them. If they believe that their present condition is satisfactory, they are welcome to pursue the same path of happiness for all time. For our part, we must observe that a peep into the homes of those wives who are the products of modern education, would show what measure of happiness they represent.

(e) Local and Municipal.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 7th, 1916.

The Chairmanship of the Mangalore Municipality.

40. Referring to the election contest for the Chairmanship of the Mangalore Municipality (vide Report No. 28, article 41), the Swadeshabhimani, of the 7th July, publishes extracts of letters from correspondents urging the opposite view that it would be wrong to criticise the election on the ground that Dr. Verghese is an outsider and a Malayali. The writer points out that both among the artisan classes and among the higher officers of Government the Malayalis play a conspicuous part in the affairs of the district, and asks what objection there could possibly be to the election of a medical officer like Dr. Verghese who has so wholeheartedly devoted himself to the service of the people of our district.

Another correspondent remarks that those who pride themselves on the fact that the successful candidate, though belonging to a different district, is also a brother Indian, ought to remember that of late, rightly or wrongly, a belief has spread among the people that a distinction, unheard of in other parts of the presidency, is made in South Canara so as to transfer or exclude temporarily from the public service the members of any community which may at any time fortuitously happen to be numerically stronger in any department. The correspondent remarks that one curious fact about it is, that this distinction applies only to the natives of the district and not to Malayalis and another curious fact is that the district itself is proposed to be divided so as to add a portion on to Malabar.

Sale of meat and fish in Calicut.

41. The Kerala Patrika, of the 8th July, draws attention to the inconvenience and hardship to the people, especially to the Muhammadans during these Ramzam days, caused by the rule that fish and meat should be sold only at particular places in the municipal market in Calicut, and observes that permission should be given to the people to sell these commodities in some places outside the market also. The paper adds that, though this step may reduce the municipal income from the market, those who have the people's welfare at heart will not take exception to it.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 8th, 1916.

(h) Railways.

The Railway administration.

42. In the course of a long leader advocating the Government management of railways in this country, the Swadesamitran, of the 4th July, writes:—The argument that the Government cannot manage the railways as profitably as private companies cannot stand. No serious flaw has been found in those railways in India which are managed directly by the Government. On the other hand, numerous advantages have been found to exist in these railways in other countries. One objection to the management of railways by foreign companies is that it results in sending away from this country a large portion of the huge profits derived by them to foreign merchants, and thereby reducing the wealth of this country. But this is not the only objection. In the East Indian Railway, the renewal of the lease for which is now on the anvil, the annual profits come up to more than 9 per cent. It is to be noted that this is the net profit, after deducting the amount appropriated by the company for its trouble of administration and interest on the borrowed capital at more than 12 per cent. If the Government borrows this capital at 4 to 4½ per cent and takes over the management of this railway, it goes without saying that it will be able to make enormous profits. Apart from the question of profits, there are numerous other advantages in a railway being under the management of the Government. If it is granted that the future economical advancement of the country and the devising of schemes for improving the welfare of the people are more important than anything else, it can be definitely asserted that every opportunity should be availed of by the Government to take over the management of a railway. We have often dwelt upon the inconveniences suffered by the Indian passengers, the obstacles thrown in the way of the improvement of the trade of this country and the impediments often caused to the growth of our industries on account of the railways in this country being under the management of English companies. We will impress on the Government once again the desirability of its gradually taking over the management of the railways in this country from foreign companies, in the interests of the people of this country.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 4th, 1916.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 5th July, also advocates the management of the railways in India being taken over by the Government from the hands of the foreign companies, and expresses its surprise at the Railway Board at Simla having called for the opinion of only the English Chambers of Commerce in different places regarding the advisability or otherwise of the Government taking over the management of the railways in India, ignoring the Indian Chambers, which are the only bodies that can be expected to know the opinion of the Indians in this matter.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 5th, 1916.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 6th, 1916.

Railway management.

43. In commenting on the letter of the Railway Board on the subject of the comparative advantages of the management of railways in India by companies and by the State, the Andhrapatrika, of the 6th July, says:—Under the pretence of impartially abridging the arguments for and against the management of railways by companies and by the State, the Secretary to the Railway Board has tried to gain his object by finding fault with the management of railways by the State. This is to be deprecated. Taking all things into consideration, it is plain that the Secretary has meant to help the companies. The arguments contained in the letter, the methods followed, and the importance given to western associations are all opposed to Indian interests. It is, therefore, necessary that the whole country should express its disapproval of this and request the Government not to take any action on the letter.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore, July 12th, 1916.

Reserved compartment for Europeans.

44. Referring to a case said to have been reported in the "Sindh Law Reports" in which it was held that the labels indicating that any railway carriages have been "Reserved for Europeans" have no legal force, and that it does not amount to a violation of any law to disregard the presence of such labels, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 12th July, says that boards containing similar illegal directions are often hung up on the doors of railway carriages in Mysore too, and that the people would do well to remember the above said decision whenever they travel by railway.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, July 11th, 1916.

The Railways and the people of India.

45. The Keralodayam, of the 11th July, dwells upon the advantages of the management of railways by the State, as well as on the various disadvantages resulting from their management by private companies, and expresses regret that the recent circular of the Government of India on the subject of Railway Administration should pay no heed to the complaints of the people. It makes special reference to the harm done to indigenous industries by the concessions given by the companies to European merchants both in regard to their articles produced in this country and to those that are imported, and concludes by remarking that the convenience and prosperity of the people deserve greater attention at the hands of the Government than the profits of the Railway Companies, but that time seems unfortunately to be still far off.

(k) General.

DRAVIDABHIMANI, Salem, June 30th, 1916.

The President of the next Congress.

46. The Dravidabhimani, of the 30th June*, is of opinion that it will be dangerous to elect Mrs. Annie Besant as the President of the next Congress and observes:—She has been agitating the public mind a good deal in connection with her having been directed to pay security. She may vent her wrath against the authorities even from the presidential chair, if she is elected. This will surely lead to some confusion. There is also another point to be noted. As men belonging to the new party like Mr. Tilak will also be present at the next Congress, it will be merely adding fuel to fire to allow Mrs. Besant to be the President. It will not only endanger the Congress, but also provoke the authorities. So it is not advisable to elect her as the President.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 5th, 1916.

The Swadesamitran, of the 5th July, reproduces the substance of the comments of the Amrita Bazaar Patrika, advocating the election of Mrs. Annie Besant as the President of the Congress this year, on the ground that she has served India in numerous ways and has proved herself to be a sincere friend of the Indians and a sympathiser of their ideals and aspirations.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 3rd, 1916.

Indian trade after the war.

47. Referring to the active efforts made by the authorities in England to safeguard the interests of her trade after the war, the Swadesamitran, of the 3rd July, says:—A Royal Commission has no doubt been appointed already to suggest means for improving trade and industries in India. But there is every reason to believe that, before this Commission finishes its enquiry and submits a report, definite arrangements would be made in the western countries in connection with trade. Every one knows that the Government of India cannot afford to adopt any measure at a moment's notice as is possible for the British Government. If India stands behind in mercantile activity, we need not point out that it will affect not only India but also England. Considering all these things, the British Government should publish now the policy it intends to adopt in connection with trade and industries hereafter and also lay down the way in which the different parts of the empire are expected to follow it. The very fact that India does not enjoy the same liberty in this matter as the self-governing colonies entitles her to a better consideration at the hands of the Government. We learn from a telegram today that Mr. Chamberlain has expressed his appreciation of the services rendered by the Indian troops in this war. We hope that he will show by his action that his appreciation is genuine.

* Received in the current week.

48. The Lokopakari, of the 3rd July, condemns the anarchical crimes frequently committed in Bengal and observes: —It is a pity that the Bengalees do not realise that they do not gain anything from their acts. On the other hand, they are casting a slur upon the reputation of the Indians as a whole and provoking the authorities to introduce repressive laws. But at the same time we do not approve of the Government making the whole country responsible for the follies of a few. The best course for it would be to punish the delinquent youths severely and at the same time to protect the others. If some of the Bengalee youths have been constantly committing anarchical murders, they have learnt it only from their association with the Germans. It is because the Germans were allowed to get into this country and run big mercantile concerns that they have succeeded in spoiling the minds of some of the young men in Bengal. We hope this experience at least will make the British Government prevent foreigners from getting into India for purposes of trade. It is the duty of the Government to prevent foreigners from trading with this country and to improve the local industries.

Anarchical crimes in Bengal.

Lokopakari, Madras, July 3rd, 1916.

49. The Hindu Nesan, of the 3rd July, writes:—The Government has now published the opinions expressed by district officials, non-officials and public bodies, in accordance with the recommendation of the Decentralisation Commission, about the establishment of panchayats. It is now clear that this Government was asked by the Government of India to enquire into this subject as early as 1910, when Sir Harold Stuart was the Secretary of the Home Department in that Government. It is now six years since then and Sir Harold Stuart has even returned to this Government and is on the eve of his retirement. Even now the opinions received on this subject have not been published by the Government of its own accord. It is the dinning of the non-official members that has forced it to publish these opinions. But the Government has not given the names of those who have given their opinions, nor has it given the opinion of the Revenue Board in full. All these show clearly that the Government would have gladly burked the whole thing, if it had been allowed to do so. Coming to the opinions of the officials, one Collector has stated that the establishment of panchayats would tell upon the condition of the depressed classes whose protection and upliftment is one of the primary duties of the Government. We do not see how this can be. It is not the Government alone that is bound to take care of the interests of the depressed classes. As the higher classes among the people are also now taking an active interest in this matter, it is a groundless fear that the establishment of panchayats would affect the condition of the lower classes adversely. It is a fact to be noted that this curious objection to the establishment of panchayats did not suggest itself to the members of the Decentralisation Commission, in which there were many capable civilians. Whatever the official view may be, we will advocate the system of introducing panchayats in the country gradually.

Village panchayats.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, July 3rd, 1916.

These panchayats are not new institutions to India. They existed in all their vigour once and died out subsequently. The only desirable move will be to revive them again with such changes as the existing conditions would necessitate.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 8th, 1916.

Village panchayats.

Writing on the subject of new panchayats in the Kistna district, the Andhrapatrika, of the 8th July, says:—There are 70 villages in the Kistna district containing a population of over 3,000 each. The Collector has recommended panchayats for 37 of these villages as a matter of experiment. These panchayats have neither civil nor criminal powers. They are no better than union panchayats. When in a big district like Kistna, there can only be 37 panchayats, each district can have on an average only 20 panchayats, and the whole Presidency can have no more than 500. But the Hon'ble Sir Sivaswami Ayyar said in 1915 that there being many thousands of villages in this province containing more than 3,000 inhabitants each, there would be established one or two thousand panchayats on the whole, supposing that a majority of these villages would get them.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, July 12th, 1916.

Village panchayats.

Referring to the recommendations of the Decentralisation Commission regarding the establishment of village panchayats, and to the opinions of the Collectors in this Presidency thereon, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 12th July, says:—It seems to us that each of the large villages should have a separate panchayat, while one or more of the smaller villages may be grouped together for this purpose. When a necessity arises for the transfer of cases that come before the panchayats, the authority in this respect may be vested in the sub-magistrates in criminal cases and in the district munsifs in civil ones. Each panchayat should consist of ten members, of whom five should form the quorum. Half of half the number of the ten members should be elected, the other half being nominated by the Government, and their term of office should be limited to three years. The president should be nominated by the Government, till village administration takes a firm hold on the people, but it should not be made compulsory that the village adhikari should be its president. Though there lies no appeal from the decision of a village panchayat, in special cases revisionary powers should be vested in the divisional officers in criminal cases and in the district munsifs in civil ones. We do not agree with those who think that vakils should not be allowed to represent clients in village courts, which in the case of ignorant people is unavoidable. As members of a panchayat do their work in an honorary capacity, and as it is not necessary for them to make long journeys, we do not think that they need be paid any batta. Like most people in this country, we are also of opinion that the expenses of the panchayats should be met out of local funds, and that for the present no new taxes should be levied on this account.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, July 11th, 1916.

Panchayats in villages.

The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 11th July, referring to the introduction of panchayats in some villages by Mr. H. H. Burkitt, I.C.S., Collector of Kistna, whose views have been approved by Government, appreciates the far-sighted policy of the Collector, and congratulates him on his excellent report and observes that the report excludes villages where the general feeling is hostile to the system. From the views expressed by the able and far-seeing Collector, we can deduce the result that the matter deserves the attention of those aspiring to self-government. When there is so much apprehension of trouble over the introduction of a panchayat in a single village what evils may not arise from the establishment of self-government in vast and extensive territories whose population is made up of various castes and different religions. The present peace and safety would not even be dreamt of.

Should the intelligent national leaders take the example of a village panchayat into consideration, it is possible that they may for ever put out of their minds the idea of self-government in India.

50. The Swadesamitran, of the 3rd July, expresses its surprise at a circular having been issued by the Government of Bengal that the non-official members of the Legislative Council should bring with them when they attend meetings the notices issued to them, that they should not bring their servants beyond a certain step in the stairs to the upper storey and that no servants of theirs should be allowed to wait on the stairs to answer their calls and says:—We cannot understand the meaning of compelling the members to produce the notice of the meetings. Perhaps the members will not be let in, if they do not produce it! Before the Morley-Minto reforms were introduced, each non-official member was allowed to have one servant to do his bidding at the cost of the Government. When these reforms were introduced, these servants were done away with in order to economise expenditure. If the members are not allowed to take their own servants beyond a certain step, are they expected to take the books, records, etc., brought by them for reference on their own shoulders? It is stated that the procedure laid down in the circular is followed in the British Parliament. But we will say, with the Bengalee, that it will be time enough to introduce these changes in the Legislative Councils here after they become self-governing bodies like the British Parliament. It is really unfair that this restriction should be imposed only in the case of the non-official members, thereby making an invidious distinction between them and the other members.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 3rd, 1916.

The Government of Bengal and the non-official members of the Legislative Council.

The Muslim Dutan, of the 8th July, also comments in the same strain upon this subject.

MUSLIM DUTAN, Madras, July 8th, 1916.

51. The Swadesamitran, of the 5th July, expresses its regret at India, which is admitted to be the brightest jewel in the Imperial diadem, not having a representative in this conference, which is convened to consider about the means of safeguarding and furthering the commercial interests of the British Empire after the end of the war, and dwelling upon the sacrifices India has made for the empire in this war, pleads for her being treated in the same way as the Colonies and allowed to have a representative at least in the second conference which is to be convened soon.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 5th, 1916.

The Allies' Economical Conference and India.

52. The Swadesamitran, of the 6th July, condemns the action of the Principal of the Forest College in Coimbatore, in having refused to give a ticket of admission to the representative of New India to enable him to be present at the distribution of prizes in the college by His Excellency Lord Pentland, and hopes that proper notice will be taken of his conduct by the authorities.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 6th, 1916.

A curious event.

53. The Andhrapatrika, of the 8th July, says:—Lord Carmichael has stated that 190 persons have been interned in Bengal, that 21 persons have been deported, and that seven have been driven out of Bengal. It is a surprise that even after putting into operation Regulation III of 1818, he wished for the existence of more repressive measures. But being a liberal-hearted ruler, he said the next moment that the Government would treat the prisoners justly. But it is evident that more than two hundred persons have been condemned without an opportunity being given to them to explain their conduct. While a rebel like Sir Roger Casement was heard before being convicted, it happens in this country that the defendant is not heard in his defence at all. Although England is close to the war theatre, yet a man is interned only after regular trial. This country is 6.000 miles away from the war theatre, the people are loyal and law-abiding, and the country is peaceful. The Government will have to consider how the operation of repressive measures will affect the people under such circumstances.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 8th, 1916.

Lord Carmichael and repressive measures

54. Referring to the notice served on Mrs. Besant by the Government of Bombay, the Andhrapatrika, of the 10th July, says:—Nobody knows what wrong Mrs. Besant has committed. There has been

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant and the Bombay Government.

much agitation against the demand of security from New India. The people have begun to suspect that the rulers hate all agitation for Home Rule for India. Indians are confronted by the question as to how the encouragement of the ideal by English statesmen and the repression of it by the Government are to be reconciled. The British are a freedom-loving race. They have helped other races to gain their freedom. They are to-day waging war to maintain the freedom of small States at a great sacrifice of life and money. It can never be against the genius of that race that we consider a question relating to freedom. Then why do the authorities prevent us from discussing the subject in theory? India feels restless on this point. Mrs. Besant does not advocate the subversion of the British rule or the adoption of violent methods. She always says that the connection of India with England should for ever continue. She condemns all violent methods. All wise men ask themselves the question why the authorities should trouble her notwithstanding all this. The people are beginning to suspect that once more the bureaucracy will show itself in all its splendour. It is deplorable that the British statesmen should create this confusion in India at this juncture. This is an indication that far-sighted people are becoming rarer and that old errors are being repeated. Lord Chelmsford should at once show the same liberal spirit as Lord Hardinge. He has to recall to his memory what Lord Hardinge did in the Cawnpore mosque affair and in the Faridpur case. He has to manifest the same patience that Lord Hardinge manifested even after his escape from the bomb thrown at him. He has to send orders to the local Governments directing them to adopt sympathetic methods and abandon repressive measures. The local Governments have as their heads the same gentlemen as in the time of Lord Hardinge. If they are narrow-minded now, the fault is Lord Chelmsford's. It is essential for His Excellency the Viceroy's reputation that he should think deeply and set things right. To do so will conduce to the peace of India, to the evolution of the Indians, to the reputation of the British, and to a closer knitting together of the empire. We trust that Lord Chelmsford will manifest the liberal spirit that is characteristic of the English people and the boldness of a military personage.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

The Gōdāvari Islands.

55. Referring to the decision of the Privy Council that the islands formed at the estuary of the Gōdāvari belong to the Crown, the Andhrapatrika, of the 10th July, says:—Hitherto the burden of proof lay upon the Government and not on the party who claimed the islands as his own. But now it has been shifted to the latter, and this strikes at the root of the fundamental principle underlying the matter.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 1st, 1916.

The naval supremacy of England.

56. The Kistnapatrika, of the 1st July, says:—The English Naval officers divided the Navy into two parts, stationing one part to the north of Scotland and the other to the south of England. The German fleet entered the North Sea on the 31st May with the object of attacking one portion of the English fleet. The English fleet suffered some loss. The extent of the German loss is not known. But it could not be less than that of the loss. Before the fight had come to a close, and when the second portion of the British Navy was about to make its appearance, the German fleet withdrew from the scene. The Naval supremacy of the British has been still more firmly established on account of this.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, June 28th, 1916.

The future of India.

57. In its leader on the subject of the place which India should occupy in the British Empire after the war, the Desamata, of the 28th June, says:—As the Colonies will have authority to govern the British Empire after the war, India will be subject to them also. To avoid such a humiliation, we must now wake up from our lethargy and do our best to get representation for India in the Parliament. For gaining this end, we have first to obtain swaraj under British suzerainty.

58. The Desamata, of the 28th June, says:—Statesmen like Mr. Churchill are advising the British rulers to raise large armies in India at least now, seeing that victory depends on the number of fighting men sent to the front. If the authorities follow this advice, we emphatically assert that India will do her utmost to defend the empire and thus serve her Sovereign.

An Indian army.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, June 28th, 1916.

59. In its leader on the subject of dyes, the Andhrapatrika, of the 11th July, makes the following remarks:—There is much scope for the dye industry in the Madras Presidency. It is essential to examine the indigenous dyes thoroughly and the Government should appoint as a dye expert one who could create an atmosphere of thought suited to the future. Can Mr. Marsden rise to the occasion? The local authorities should consider over the matter and appoint persons fit to ably investigate the question. We trust that the local Government will at once set to work about this matter.

Dyes.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 11th, 1916.

60. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 7th July, in the course of a long article under the heading "This is the straight path", observes:—Like the poor devotee in a folktale who obtained the privilege of a single boon from God and thereupon prayed that he must live to see his grandson become a prime minister in which are implied several boons such as long life, progeny, wealth and eminence the people of India are realising more and more fully of late the fact that the numerous reforms which were being urged on the Government by the Congress year after year may very appropriately, be replaced by a single demand for Home Rule. The demand for particular rights without the power to determine the underlying main policy of Government is like the attempt to enter the inner apartments of a house without first securing the key of the main entrance. We have already, more than once, explained to our readers the meaning of the term swaraj. Still, we should like to make it clear once again. Just as a father entrusts the management of his property to his grown up son and continues to help him with guidance, swaraj is no more than a similar freedom to the people to conduct the administration of the country, with the Sovereign authority and final supervision and control still in the hands of the British. In that event, we can effect for ourselves whatever political or social reform and whatever industrial progress we may desire. On obtaining swaraj, we may carry out Mr. Gokhale's compulsory education scheme, solve the difficulties in regard to the Indian emigrants in South Africa, remove the defects of the jail administration pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Kesava Pillay and modify Mrs. Besant's Press Act. Further, we may organise an army and navy for the protection of both England and India and render other services to the empire. Although the Indians have capacity, intelligence, originality, heroism, etc., still, being a conquered race without the right of self-government they are looked down upon by other nations. In the interests of social reform, too, swaraj is equally necessary. The great reformers of the past, such as Manu lived only in the days of swaraj. Reformers under the present conditions form a new class by themselves and thus create fresh castes instead of reducing their number. The reformers, however, think otherwise. They believe that fitness for swaraj cannot come unless social reform is first effected. In truth, however, there is not much logic in what they say. With the exception of female education, all other reforms which they urge are already observed in practice from time immemorial among all castes of people except the Brahmins. Yet, in what respects is their condition better than that of the Brahmins? What social evils are they able to escape better than the Brahmins? The main point we would urge on the attention of our readers is that there is no connection whatever between political and social reform. If any connection exists it can only be that through political reform, social, religious and all other kinds of reform are possible. That is why the demand for swaraj is made and this indicates the straight path.

Home Rule for India.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 7th, 1916.

BHARATHI, Bellary, July 7th, 1916.

The unrest in Bengal.

61. Referring to the recent murder of Babu Vasanta Kumar Chatterjee, Deputy Superintendent of the Bengal Criminal Investigation Department, and to another big dacoity committed in a village in Faridpur, the Bharathi, of the 7th July,* says :—These enormities are believed to have been committed by Bengali youths. When our popular leaders are avowing that we are a very peaceable and law-abiding people, we wonder why these youths in Bengal should fail to see what a heavy blot they cause on the fair name of India by such dastardly crimes as these.

BHARATHI, Bellary, July 7th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant and her Home Rule propaganda.

62. In an article expressing its inordinate admiration for Mrs. Besant's knowledge and ability, the Bharathi, of the 7th July, says:—Mrs. Besant is sowing the seeds of self-government in the heart of every Indian. She is going from house to house, from village to village, and from bazaar to bazaar, and like electricity she is drawing the student population towards the current of liberty. Her strength does not lie in mere eloquence. She fully practises what she preaches Already her name is on every lip even among rustics, who through her efforts have begun to grasp the meaning of swaraj and self-government. If her propaganda should continue for some time more, we may be sure that the meaning of self-government will be more widely known and the people will evince a keener interest in the progress of their country. As her liberal propaganda is finding unanimous support everywhere, she will doubtless gain the object for which she is working.

JARIDAH-I ROZGAR, Madras, July 12th, 1916.

A reference to our loyalty.

63. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 12th July, writes:—From time to time the information regarding the loyalty of Indians and their devotion to the King-Emperor is published in important and influential European journals which extol the bravery, determination and self-sacrifice of our compatriots in unmistakable and dignified terms.

We have often written that India is doing its duty and there is no greater cause for pride for India than the fact that its soldiers are fighting side by side with the King-Emperor's forces. They know that Great Britain is fighting to maintain peace and security in the country. Hence whatever we have is Britain's. To die for justice is something to be proud of.

III.—LEGISLATION.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

The Government of India Bill.

64. Referring to the meetings of protests against the Government of India Bill in Madras and Bombay, the Andhrapatrika, of the 10th July, says :—The intended changes violate the fundamental rights of the people. The Indians have not been given an opportunity to criticise the Bill. They are at one with the Europeans in India in condemning it. We trust that the House of Lords will do well to give up the idea of passing the Bill in the teeth of such strong and unanimous opposition.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 3rd, 1916.

The Press Act.

65. The Swadesamitran, of the 3rd July, reproduces the substance of the comments of the Social Reformer, a paper published in Bombay, on the baneful effects of this Act.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 8th, 1916.

The Press Act.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 8th July, has a cartoon of a man representing the Press Act and of a lady representing New India with the following thereunder :—

The Press Act.—What wickedness! What arrogance! Newspapers shudder at the very mention of my name. Who can stand before me?

Annie Besant (New India)—Will your bravery avail before me? My bravery is known to all the world. My pen is not a soft one. Note its colour, length and sharpness. Your bludgeon is no match for my pen. Even if I should lose my property and my life by your rude blow, my patriotism would never budge. The whole country is in my grip. You will do well to give up your wickedness.

* Received in the current week.

The Press Act.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 5th July, says:—The Press Act is a standing menace to newspapers as it places them at the mercy of the authorities and thus makes them lifeless. The Government should repeal it and take the people into their confidence, so that the magnanimity of the British Empire may shine out all the more, and the loyalty of the Indians grow all the stronger for it.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 5th, 1916.

Usury in India.

66. The Mysore Star, of the 9th July, writes:—The Behar High Court the other day disallowed the claim of a sowcar who lent Rs. 1,375 to some person and, despite his having received Rs. 1,700 at the end of two years towards the principal and interest, claimed Rs. 15,000 after some time as the sum to which the balance of Rs. 856 then due had amounted at a certain rate of compound interest. Though this represents an extreme case, ruthless usury of this type may be said to be common almost in every part of India. Will not the Government rescue the poor borrowers from the clutches of these relentless sowcars by enacting a measure prohibiting exaction beyond a prescribed maximum rate of interest?

MYSORE STAR, Mysore, July 9th, 1916.

The Madras Legislative Council.

67. The Hindu Nesan, of the 4th July, applauds the action of Lord Carmichael in systematically nominating a larger number of non-officials to the Legislative Council in that Province than is done in Madras and reproducing the comments of the Swadesamitran of the 1st July 1916 on this subject, abstracted in paragraph 47 of Report No. 28 of 1916, expresses the hope that Lord Pentland will follow the principle obtaining in the sister Province of Bengal in nominating members to the local Legislative Council this time and reduce the number of officials in this Council.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 4th, 1916.

The Madras Legislative Council.

The Lokaprakasam, of the 10th July, regrets that officials form the majority of members in the Madras Legislative Council, points out that, while a vacancy in the Council, created by the retirement of an official member, was filled up at the time of Lord Carmichael by the appointment of Diwan Bahadur Ādinārāyanayya Garu, it is not known why Lord Pentland nominated an official to the seat at the end of his term, and hopes that His Excellency Lord Pentland will be pleased to meet the wishes of the people by reducing the number of official members in the Council and increasing that of the non-official ones, when nominations are made in future.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, July 10th, 1916.

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

Distinction of caste.

68. The Lokopakari, of the 3rd July, says:—A curious practice obtains in Travancore and that is that, in a Darbar, all Europeans, whatever may be their position, are allowed seats, while all the Indians, including the highest officials in the State, are made to stand. In the Darbar held last month, the European District Police Superintendent had a seat, while the Indian District Magistrate, District Judge, Diwan-Peishkar and others had to be standing. What an unjust system! If the Indians are insulted like this even in a Native State, what is the wonder in foreign Governments insulting them? We do not object to privileges being granted to foreigners. Our view is only that people of all castes and races should be treated alike. It is surprising indeed that the Maharaja of Travancore has not realised this. He has, perhaps, forgotten that the Europeans in Coonoor have in a body objected to his purchasing a bungalow there on the ground that Indians should not live near the European quarters!

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 3rd, 1916.

VRITTANTA PATRIKE, Mysore, July 6th, 1916.

The financial condition of Mysore.

69. The Vrittanta Patrike, of the 6th July (received during the current week) in a leading article, writes :—The Comptroller has just published a report on the actual receipts and expenditure of the State during the year 1914–15, i.e., 12 months after the close of the period to which it relates. We fail to see what purpose is served by this report, unless it is published within three months after the close of the year. Again, although we have already entered upon the year 1916–17, the estimates for the year have not been sanctioned as yet. We wonder why the budget should not be prepared and placed before the Legislative Council for discussion before the actual commencement of the year. We are surprised that the Government is unable to get in time the requisite estimates from the officers concerned. The budget should be passed at least before the end of the second week of June, and in that case, the various departments of Government can know at the beginning of the official year what amounts they can expect to have at their disposal. The present dilatory methods will cause needless difficulties and confusion. From the reports now published we find that the actual receipts for 1914–15 fell short of the estimate by Rs. 2,80,239, while the expenditure went up by Rs. 29,45,814. The latter, however, can be explained by the fact that fifty lakhs were contributed to the war fund. Thus, the year closed with a deficit of Rs. 10,63,053. Further, the railways, the electrical works and the Cauvery Reservoir project entailed an expenditure of Rs. 88,91,263. This brings the amount to the credit of the State from Rs. 1,01,08,057 at the beginning of the year to Rs. 72,26,538 at its close. If the huge projects now in hand should be speedily proceeded with, the remaining surplus too will disappear before long. Our Government will next have to raise loans for any big projects or resort to fresh taxation. We should like to know the amount of the railway debt in the years 1882 and 1906–1907 and also the amount accumulated during the intervening period towards the liquidation of these debts. Although Rs. 5,000 has been entered in the budget, there is no entry to show that any amount has been paid during the year in payment of the interest on the loan. A report like the present should set forth exactly the amount of the liabilities of the State as well as its assets in various forms. We trust that the assets exceed the liabilities. As the completion of the projects already half done and the University scheme will entail enormous demands on the resources of the State, we should have liked to see how it is proposed to find the necessary funds. We would like the members of the Legislative Council to scrutinize the budget thoroughly and suggest any means which may occur to them as regards the meeting of all this expenditure without having to resort to fresh taxation. The expenditure for 1914–15 has diminished the surplus by Rs. 28,81,519; and we fear that it has been further diminished considerably during 1915–16. We would emphasize the need, therefore, of exercising particular care and foresight in sanctioning this year's budget. The prices of all articles have gone up considerably consequent on the war. This can hardly be the time for enhancing the expenditure. We have no hesitation in saying therefore that the foremost duty of the Government consists in making all possible retrenchment in the various departments of Government and lay by as much as possible.

VRITTANTA PATRIKE, Mysore, July 13th, 1916.

The administration of Municipalities and Local Boards in Mysore.

70. Commenting on the report for the year 1914–15 on the administration of Municipalities and Local Boards in Mysore, the Vrittanta Patrike, of the 13th July, says.—Nobody will assert that local self-government in our province represents a satisfactory state of things. Our towns and villages are insanitary. The roads are in a state of disrepair. There is dearth of good drinking water. Street lighting is not properly done. There are no schools for children. Whose fault is it all? Whom shall we hold responsible for these defects and shortcomings? The people are generally of opinion that the Government are to blame for this state of things. But we think it altogether unjust to blame the Government in this matter. They have invested local bodies with large powers, and it is their own fault that these bodies do not exercise them properly. There are heavy outstandings in most municipalities. The arrears in one municipality amount to as much as three years' revenue; in another, to two years' and in fifteen others, a whole year's revenue remains uncollected. The indifference to duty which is a general characteristic of our people seems to be the true cause of this neglected state of things. The only fault we would find with Government is that they have placed some unnecessary restrictions on these bodies. Even minor items of expenditure and charges of an unimportant nature are not readily sanctioned. The budget of these bodies for the current year has not been published by Government as yet. We must observe that the Government ought to evince greater interest in the progress of these bodies and appoint more energetic officers. In many centres the officers entrusted with municipal administration are still Government servants and the Councils and the Boards concerned are without the power to dispense with the services of unsatisfactory men. The Government ought, therefore, to exercise closer supervision in regard to these. One defect that is now observed is that the Government do not exercise effective control over the administration of these local bodies, nor do they give proper opportunities to such of them as are eager to manage these affairs independently and efficiently.

71. The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 12th July, writes:—The budget for the current year will be placed before the Legislative Council on the 17th July. It is most surprising that although it is 12 days since the new official year has actually begun, the budget has yet to be sanctioned. Excepting the university scheme no important project is proposed to be undertaken during the year. The estimated surplus of twenty eight thousand shows that the financial outlook is fairly bright. Compared with the budgets for previous years, this year's budget shows that the Government have effected economy in every possible direction. But the Government have not stinted in any direction to the detriment of progress and the allotments towards education, medicine and agriculture are more liberal than those of last year. A considerable part of the allotments under railways, education, agriculture and irrigation remained unutilised at the end of the last year. The explanations offered by the Financial Secretary in this connection are rather unsatisfactory. The increase in the excise revenue is explained by an exact repetition of the remarks made last year that it is due to the enhancement of the taxes. But no facts have been stated to prove conclusively that there has been no increase in the quantity of liquor consumed. Even granting that the consumption has decreased, an increase in the excise revenue can hardly be conducive to the well-being of the people. We do not know why the proposal to establish new elementary schools has not been carried out. We hope that the members of the Legislative Council will not let go the opportunity afforded them of criticising the budget and of emphasising the importance of fully utilising the funds allotted for works of a useful nature.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore, July 12th, 1916.

The Mysore budget.

The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 12th July, under "Notes and Comments," complains of lavishness on the part of Government in the matter of the pay and allowances of the higher officials, pointing out, in particular, that for only a hundred miles of railway directly under the management of the State, an expensive staff is being maintained on fat salaries out of all proportion to the importance of the work done, and the paper further observes that the boons, such as the University Scheme, railway extension, the various industrial projects under the auspices of the Economic Conference which are almost thrust on the people are so overwhelming that one feels inclined to explain "Save us from our friends!" The paper further remarks:—Why should not the members of the Legislative Council point out the grievances arising from these well-meant projects of Government? Can a mere increase of the number of officers and of departments effect the progress of a people? Our Diwan is wont to point out our backward condition by comparing our State with the more advanced countries such as Canada and Australia. Why should not a similar parallel be drawn between the expenditure incurred by those countries on such things as primary education and the amount spent by us for like purposes? Why does he not speak of the proportion between the expenditure on education, etc., and the amount spent by those Governments on the salaries of its officials and compare it with the proportion which these same items bear in our own State? Why should the minor officials alone be treated to sermons on self-sacrifice and patriotism when they ask for a slight increase of their pay? Why should not the Members of the Legislative Council raise these questions? But we are afraid that their own liberty in this matter is also very limited and they cannot press questions which they are asked not to.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore, July 12th, 1916.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, July 7th, 1916.

The New Debenture Loan.

72. Referring to the New Debenture Loan of Travancore, the Yogakshemam, of the 7th July, points out that if the Darbar cannot manage to construct the Quilon-Trivandrum Railway without having recourse to this loan, the better course will be to put off its construction, deplores that, while the people can now procure interest at the rate of nine or even twelve per cent, they should be asked to contribute to the loan, which will fetch them interest only at five per cent, asks why the Darbar cannot obtain a loan from the Bank, where without any interest their own money has been kept as current deposits, and concludes by remarking that there would have been some return for all the hardships of the people, if the Government had utilised the loan for the establishment of some industries for the benefit of the unemployed in Travancore, instead of utilising it for the construction of the said line, which would only go to fill the coffers of the South Indian Railway Company, who would only pay interest at the rate of two per cent to the Darbar, who in their turn would have to pay an interest of five per cent.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

1. United India and Native States, for the week ending 20th July, writes:—"We are sorry that the leaders of the Moslem league should have lost their heads over the action of the Grand Sherif of Mecca who, as the actual custodian of the holy places in Arabia, has declared his independence of Turkey. . . . . His action in throwing away his allegiance to the corrupt clique at Constantinople should surely commend the sympathy and warm approval of the Indian Mussalmans. There is no question of divided allegiance in this for Indian Muhammadans can retain their loyalty to their religion and yet commend the Grand Sherif's fine example in ending the fiction of Turkish overlordship over Arabia."

The Arabian revolt against the Turks.

United India and Native States, Madras, July 20th, 1916.

II.—Home Administration.

2. The West Coast Spectator, of the 18th July, observes:—"Bill Sykes and his gang are abroad. This time they are devoting especial attention to minor things, without breaking open walls and boxes, orchards and stray vessels thrown about by the careless householder being their favourites. This state of affairs calls for better police vigilance and better checking of beats. Our beat constable has a special liking for shop verandahs and Morpheus which is to the advantage of Bill; and this distemper Bobby is labouring under should be eradicated."

Petty thefts in Calicut.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 18th, 1916.

3. The Indian Patriot, of the 19th July, states:—"After more than three months, the Government has appointed Mr. F. B. M. Cardozo to act for Mr. F. Armitage. The latter will return in less than three months, and it is doubtful, therefore, that Mr. Cardozo will be able to do more than gain a general acquaintance with the work of the Commissioner. Mr. Pelly, however, who is Mr. Cardozo's senior, will have a cause of dissatisfaction, because he was not promoted as he should have been expecting, and Mr. Cardozo's transfer to Madras involves two other transfers which could have been avoided without any incovenience to public interests. Diwan Bahadur P. Parankusam Nayudu was acting for Mr. Armitage for more than three months, and he could have been allowed to continue in the Commissioner's office until the return of Mr. Armitage from leave. . . . . That instead of promoting Mr. Pelly as Commissioner his junior was taken over his head is due, we believe, entirely to the necessity of bringing in an outsider as Magistrate, because the vacancy in the office of Chief Presidency Magistrate is expected to be permanent, and it would be highly inconvenient to create temporary claimants who cannot be fittingly appointed to the permanent vacancy. But even this, in our opinion, would have been met in a satisfactory manner by appointing Mr. Bazlullah temporarily as Chief Presidency Magistrate. He has shown himself to be an able and sound Magistrate; and he would have certainly deserved the mark of appreciation which an acting appointment as Chief Presidency Magistrate would have implied. . . . . Anyhow things did not happen exactly as Government themselves had intended; and that must be the consolation to Mr. Pelly who was surely expecting to be made Commissioner."

Police appointments in the Madras City.

Indian Patriot, Madras, July 19th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 20th July, says:—"It is generally beyond non-official comprehension to unravel the mysteries of some appointments in India, and Madras had one such in this week. Mr. Armitage, the late Police Commissioner of this city, went on six months' leave three months ago, and will return in three months. Mr. Parankusam Nayudu acted for him all this while; and suddenly another officer takes his place, superseding Mr. Pelly, the Chief Presidency Magistrate, and involving some disturbance in the Police Department. One wonders why Mr. Nayudu was not permitted to continue for three months more, or why the European was not brought in earlier. Was the game worth the candle?"

New India, Madras, July 20th, 1916.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 20th, 1916.

4. The following appears in New India, of the 20th July:—

"An Outrage in Calcutta.

The internment of Babu Shyan Sundar Chakravarti.

No, good reader; not an assassination; not a dacoity, motor or other; not a bomb. But the arrest of a respectable gentleman, Babu Shyan Sundar Chakravarti, Assistant Editor of the Bengalee, without reason given, without notification of his offence, without a chance of clearing himself; the Editor, Babu Surendranath Bannerji's safe was also searched by the police. The Bengalee bears witness to the blameless life of the burgled man; for four years, save for one day's illness, he has been in its office from 10-30 a.m. to 6 p m. He was known to condemn unlawful movements, and none has a harsh word to say about him. The arrest is legal, doubtless, but it is truly unlawful, the breaking of the sacred Law of Justice which holds society together. When injustice is perpetrated, when crimes are committed legally, when innocence is no protection, and harmless men are treated as criminals, then we live in a condition of anarchy, no matter what legal sanction may cover the wrong-doer. "Civilisation" does not protect us; we should be better off in a state of savagery, for then we should be on our guard, we should carry arms, and protect ourselves. We are helpless; we pay taxes to be wronged."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 20th, 1916.

5. The West Coast Spectator, of the 20th June, remarks:—"The cattle nuisance on our local roads, we have repeatedly been making mention of, still continues unabated, to the danger of the public, especially of young children going to and returning from schools. We suppose it is the clear duty of the local police to put a stop to this dangerous nuisance. As we said the other day, they have but to proceed under the 'Pinhey circular' which, we believe, has not yet been withdrawn.

The cattle nuisance in Calicut.

"Mr. A. F. Pinhey's circular directed the police to catch and impound all cattle and goats found straying in the streets and to prosecute the owners. Accordingly, several owners of cattle were prosecuted and as long as Mr. Pinhey remained in the district, his salutory and wholesome orders were carried out, and hardly a cow or goat was found straying on public roads sometimes attacking people.

"The order of things has, since then, changed; and cattle are allowed to stray about and block thoroughfares to the serious inconvenience of the public. If in such a large and extensive city as Madras, the police can successfully check the evil, surely in the comparatively small town of Calicut, they ought to meet with similar, if not greater success in arresting this serious public nuisance. We trust the District Magistrate and the Superintendent of Police will give this matter their attention."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 22nd, 1916.

6. In a leader under the heading "Rumours," New India, of the 22nd July, says:—"Dame Rumour is ever a busy gossip, and in India she has a thousand tongues. She almost takes the place of the newspapers in the bazaars, and she very often antedates them, and is quite, if not more, accurate. She whispered in the tramcars and the streets about the levying of security on New India, and was 'ahead of the mail.' She talked about the Bombay order in the clubs and courts before it was sent, and Mrs. Besant was several times asked if it were true, and she, knowing nothing about it, said that it was impossible. But she has found that nothing is impossible to an autocracy. Now Dame Rumour is chattering all over the place about her internment, to follow a successful application to Simla to extend the Offence Act (i.e., the Defence of India Act), intended to save India from invasions, treasonable conspiracies and riots, to peaceful, law-abiding Madras. Simla is an unknown quantity these days, but has so far rejected all popular appeals. True, Sir Sankaran Nayar is there, but what is one against so many, however brave he may be? . . . . Another thing that Dame Rumour whispers is that there is a plot—she loves plots, does Dame Rumour—to involve Mrs. Besant in a criminal act, so as to justify the Bombay Government. It is so easy in India to buy up a few witnesses, and for false reports to be concocted and sent up. . . . . One of Dame Rumour's is that the Government have been informed that arms and bombs are kept at Adyar! We cannot believe that the Government could be so incredibly silly as to accept such a lie. But the plotters might do as they did in Calcutta, and hide the weapons they then discover. 'He who hides can find,' and an estate of nearly 300 acres is large enough for the burial by any scamp of his nefarious wares. . . . . In the early morning of the 21st instant at 2 a.m. four men, one armed with a gun and one with a heavy lathi, paid a surprise visit to Mr. Arundale's bungalow at Adyar. The watchman was on the alert, and demanded their business. 'We are only looking round,' said they, and it is obviously the usual thing and a pleasant pastime to look round other people's houses at 2 o'clock in the morning. They were requested to cease looking round, and departed. Mrs. Besant has notified the local police and the District Magistrate. Having Dame Rumour in mind, she would prefer that gentlemen with guns should not creep round Adyar at night, lest they should forgetfully leave their guns behind them.

The Criminal Investigation Department and Mrs. Besant.

"The Criminal Investigation Department have been hunting Mrs. Besant for a long time, as they hunted Mr. Gokhale, and in these huntings a certain danger is involved. The anarchist is much safer under these circumstances than the innocent law-abiding citizen, for a plot may be discovered, or at least the Criminal Investigation Department may find suspicious traces, and he can circumvent them; he knows where he is. But the innocent, making no plot, they find nothing, and so as he must be guilty, being in the Government 'black books,' they weave a web round him out of their own fertile imaginations, having made up their minds that so much time as has been devoted to hunting him must not be wasted. Karma is, however, stronger than the Criminal Investigation Department. Moreover as the Prophet Muhammad said—when his armed enemy sprang on him unarmed, with the triumphant cry: 'There are only the two of us'—'There is a third.' 'Who,' said His startled foe. 'God,' replied the Prohpet. That is too often forgotten, both by rulers and by the Criminal Investigation Department."

(b) Courts.

Interned Indians from South Africa.

7. Referring to the judgment of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri in the Calcutta High Court on a Habeas Corpus application for the release of five Indians interned on their arrival from South Africa, New India, of the 19th July, says:—"We are living under a regimè which exalts the executive above the Courts of Justice, and places us all at the mercy of a few Bureaucrats. True, their Letters Patent give the Governors power to override their Councils, and if they were strong men they would do so. But they are not strong. These five poor men may rot in gaol. The Assistant Editor of the Bengalee is arrested, no one knows for what, and is spirited away. And this is British Rule. . . . . What does internment mean, this power which is in the hands of Governors in Council, and is strengthened by the Offence Act? It means that by a mere arbitrary exercise of power, any man or woman may be arrested and imprisoned within an area laid down in the lettre de cachet. No trial can be claimed: no evidence is published: no reason is given. The property of the victim is seized—a punishment reserved by the ordinary law for the highest crimes—he is rendered penniless, no communication may he hold with any friend that does not pass under the eye of an enemy. He is subjected to the grossest personal indignity, and has no redress. And all this degradation is inflicted on him at the arbitrary order of a small group of four men, who may be his personal enemies, who are his enemies in thought and belief."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 19th, 1916.

(d) Education.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 20th, 1916.

8. New India, of the 20th July, writes:—"Will the Senate rise to the occasion at to-morrow's meeting?—That is the question which every Indian is now asking. The popular members of the Senate have begun admirably in demanding an extraordinary meeting. Will they follow up, and fight out the issue? The odds are great, and the experts have been very busy. They will do everything in their power to defeat the object of the Indian leaders. But that knowledge need not discourage the latter. The experts have been guilty of following a most inhuman policy, and it will be impossible to justify it in open discussion. There lies the strength of the popular cause. . . . . It is indeed inconceivable how the experts will justify their annual inhuman performances. What reason can they put forward in justification of the fact that in Madras alone have such slaughters been known for years? The calamities in Bombay and Allahabad are of very recent origin, and from what has occurred publicly in Calcutta, it would not be wrong to suppose that the two other Universities drew their inspiration from Madras. Further, it is a bare fact that in no Province has the slaughter been so heavy as in the local University. How can the experts justify it? Are the students of Madras inferior in mental powers? . . . . The real cause for the slaughter lies in the perverted notions of the Madras experts, and not in any other phenomenon. . . . . If in spite of all these considerations, the experts cling to the stock argument that the slaughter was due to indiscriminate admissions, what have they to say on the opinions of the Principals of the Kumbakonam and Rajahmundry Colleges? They state frankly that they were most discriminate in admitting the students. Yet the slaughter was as heavy. What have the experts to say on that point? Will they ask us to brush aside the opinions of these two European members of the Educational Service on the plea that it does not fit in with their views? . . . . How is the slaughter justified—involving as it does the ruin, the unnecessary and unjust ruin, of hundreds of households—if the Senate should accept a resolution for a reform which was long overdue?"

The Madras University and the Intermediate examinations.

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 22nd, 1916.

9. The Indian Patriot, of the 22nd July, observes:—"The Madras University, in spite of the violent criticisms to which it has been subjected, is trying to live up to its reputation as a purposeless and irresponsible institution. . . . . School Final, as it originally was, is now no more. The law course was then tampered with. One morning the Presidency woke to the touch of a forceful personality who was of opinion that the law course should not be two years, but three years. Of course, public opinion, as usual, protested against any undue straining of the youth. If failed Matriculates in India could return from Dublin as full-fledged Barristers-at-Law after a three years' course, why should an Indian youth who has passed his Intermediate after two years' study, his Bachelor of Arts after two years' study, be still subjected to a full three years' course? But the University of Madras would not condescend to hear the little whispers of little men. . . . . The hardships which had been foretold but had been ignored began to be felt, and the University is called upon to undo to-day what it did yesterday—a characteristic peculiar to the Madras University. . . . . There is no more terrible reality in India to-day than the cold-blooded sacrifice of Young India in the name of education at the altar of examinations."

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, July 19th, 1916.

10. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 19th July, writes:—"Resignation of honorary offices as a protest against official obstinacy is, we fancy, becoming as infectious as the new form of suicide invented

The Allahabad Municipal Council.

by unhappy girls, of setting fire to their bodies after soaking themselves in kerosine. The one is no more effectual in getting round the official mind than the other is in removing social abuses. The latest in the resignation line is that of twelve Councillors of the Allahabad Municipality as a protest against the way in which the new Municipal Act there is being worked. While we appreciate the moral courage of the dozen protestants in kicking the dust of the Municipal Board off their feet and the spirit of self-sacrifice shown by them, we have no faith in its efficacy in compelling the Government to climb down."

The Shermadevi Taluk Board.

11. In an article under the heading, "The Official Mind," the Indian Patriot, of the 21st July, remarks :—"A strange story comes from the Shermadevi taluk in the Tinnevelly district which, if true, deserves attention. The raising by the union of house-taxes cent per cent has resulted in a stream of memorials to the President. The usual procedure adopted is the deputation of a Tahsildar to enquire into the complaint and settle each case on its merits. But the non-official President of the Taluk Board followed an unusual procedure. The Chairmen of the Unions whence complaints had gone forth were called upon to proclaim by beat of tom-tom that the petitioners should present themselves at the next meeting of the Taluk Board. This was hailed with delight by the petitioners who thought that the appointment of a non-official President meant instantaneous and full relief. Between Shermadevi, where the Taluk Board meeting is held, and the Unions from which the petitioners had been called upon to present themselves in person, often 42 miles had to be covered. But their grievance was genuine. The raising of the house-tax cent per cent was a hardship. More than five hundred hardworking house-holders left their work and their house and assembled at the meeting of the Taluk Board at which the wonderful prodigy, known as the non-official President, was to pronounce judgment on their petitions, bring them relief, and send them home with cheer. And they blessed the day, we suppose, when the non-official President, for whom the press and the platform were clamouring, had sent for them all, five hundred in number, to convince them that justice would be done them speedily and fully. What was their surprise when the non-official President said to those assembled that the Taluk Board members would enquire into their petitions and he would decide the matter on the merits of their report. The oracle having pronounced, the crowds had to disperse. So much worry, expense, the long journey, the shattered hopes! As if the enhancement of the house-tax was not enough, these long journeys were ordered. The Taluk Board office has been removed from Shermadevi to Ambasamudram to suit the convenience of the President who has his house there. We sincerely hope that such pilgrimages to the oracle for such useless order may not be insisted upon, and that when any instructions have to be issued, five hundred people would not be summoned from 40 miles away. The tom-tom should be used with economy and advantage."

The Government of Bombay and Mrs. Annie Besant.

12. The Malabar Herald, for the week ending 15th July, writes :—"Mrs. Annie Besant's position is getting fairly hot for her. Much as we sympathise with her as a woman, we cannot for a moment tolerate her insolent tone, especially when she deals with the arrogance, as she calls it, of the bureaucracy. From all appearances we are inclined to the belief that she is determined to draw the Government into the field for a fair fight. How she is going to achieve this end it is premature to say. But her boldness seems to give the impression that she is strongly backed up, and that she can count upon some mysterious help, probably of the Mahatmas. The latest development in her situation is an Order-in-Council from His Excellency the Governor of Bombay forbidding her entrance into that Province on pain of punishment either by jail or fine. How Mrs. Besant's political mission in India is going to end, we do not know. But it may be safely assumed that matters are nearing a climax. In the meanwhile, she has organised a powerful political body in England to support her cause in India. And in the event of a rupture between her and the Government of India, she will likely fight the battle from the soil of England."

MALABAR HERALD, British Cochin, July 15th, 1916.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 17th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 17th July, says:—"It would be interesting to know exactly what the Government of Bombay has done with regard to adverse criticism on its extraordinary proceedings against Mrs. Besant. The Bombay Chronicle said it might not comment on the order, and Mr. Horniman states that his press has distinct orders not to print any adverse criticism. Does the Bombay Government discriminate between press and press, forbid the Bombay Chronicle while they allow the Advocate? The Indu Prakash and the Gujerati speak out. The Bombay Government methods are truly remarkable."

SOUTH INDIAN MAIL, Madura, July 17th, 1916.

The South Indian Mail, for the week ending 17th July, observes:—"The Defence of India Act is intended to be applied on extraordinary occasions. It is supremely a war-measure and as such, should be resorted to in the case of those who are enemies of the Empire and who, even though they are the subjects of the King-Emperor, work antagonistically to prejudice the stability of the Empire. Its application is thoroughly uncalled for and is extremely inexpedient in the case of those, who are declared to be loyal citizens of the country and work for the strengthening of the tie between England and India by every constitutional means in their power. The Bombay Government have, in pursuance of the power vested in them by the Act, prohibited Mrs. Besant from entering the Bombay Presidency on the ground that her presence there would endanger the public safety. No other reasons have been assigned for their action. Her paper New India has identified itself with the Home Rule movement and advocated the necessity for the formation of a scheme in that connection with a vehemence which is entirely new to Indian journalism. . . . . The application of the Act will add much to strain the already over-strained mind of the Presidency, and we earnestly appeal to His Excellency the Viceroy to rescind the order of the Bombay Government."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 18th, 1916.

New India, of the 18th July, remarks:—"We cannot believe that the Bombay Government can be quite so silly as its Criminal Investigation Department, among whom the influence of the egregious Mr. Edwards may still have left trace. We hear from a friend in Bombay that the police took it into their wise heads that Mrs. Annie Besant would defy the order of the Bombay Government, and betake herself to Bombay. Then, the fertile imagination decided that the excited youth of Bombay would make a tremendous demonstration to welcome her; the police would arrest her, the young men would riot, and then the police, ready armed, would fall on the unarmed crowd and have their way. Really it is very annoying that Home Rulers will not play up to the police drama. There were Mr. Edwards and the Magistrate all ready for a riot at Christmas, outside the Mussalman meeting, and the tiresome Muslims would not play. Here is Mrs. Besant, for whose reception everything was ready, and the aggravating woman went to the Suguna Vilasa Sabha instead of to Bombay. These people never give the police a chance.

"But seriously the Government are quite deluded. Mrs. Besant began her political training 42 years ago in the school of Charles Bradlaugh. She is now nearly 69, but still follows his principles and his methods in political warfare. Her work is open and aboveboard, and she abhors violence. Most of all would she abhor the gathering together of a crowd of splendid Indian students to be attacked by the armed police, many perhaps to be killed and injured. Even if the dear lads should make a successful riot it would mean for them death or imprisonment. Why she should go to Bombay in order to be fined and imprisoned no one explains, nor why she should wish to lead students into a hopeless conflict. It seems incredible, but perhaps the Government believes the sillinesses of the Anglo-Indian papers, that she seeks notriety and wants 'to be in the lime-light'. But she has easily any fame she wants; as orator, as writer, as worker, she needs nothing more than she has. She could gain more by siding with the Government than by opposing them, and might spend the last few years of her life in peace and honour. Why should she take so hard a path, where so easy a one is open, and risk financial ruin, and loss of liberty, and obloquy, if not for the sake of what she believes to be her duty—the service of Liberty. She may be wrong, but it is silly to ascribe to her preposterous motives."

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, July 19th, 1916.

The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 19th July, states:—"The action taken by the Government of Bombay against Mrs. Annie Besant under the Defence of India Act has been the subject of much adverse comment. The reason given for the action is that 'there are reasonable grounds for believing that Mrs. Annie Besant has acted, and is about to act, in a manner prejudicial to public safety.' . . . . It would undoubtedly have been of immense help to the public if they can be given an idea of those activities of Mrs. Annie Besant which call for action being taken under an Act which was meant to punish those who are alien enemies or who are known to sympathise or conspire with the enemies. In keeping such information from the public they are making Mrs. Besant's admirers think that the worst of her sin is that she wants Home Rule for India, and that she is not capable of conspiring against the King or the Government established by law. . . . . If she is more than a Home Ruler and is really guilty of serious offence the public ought to be warned so that they may wash their hands of her. We think that some indication must be given of any of her subterranean activities which have given reasonable grounds for action being taken by the Government of Bombay."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 17th, 1916.

13. The Indian Patriot, of the 17th July, remarks:—"We regret to find that even the great European War, and the brilliant part that Indians have played in it have not obliterated in the South African mind the deep aversion to Indians. The hostility to the self-reliant and thrifty Indian traders still rages in all its fury; the subterfuges which the European employed against the free development of paying business by Indians still continue . . . . That Indians should be treated with such persistent malignity points to only one consideration, that they do not want Indians on any other term except as indentured coolies. The Indian, who is found unfit for self-government in India, is found in South Africa, by the South African Government, so formidable, that special laws are enacted to keep him out."

Indians in South Africa.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 18th, 1916.

14. New India, of the 18th July, observes:—"When it was announced repeatedly that India would not be represented at the Economic Conference, there was at least the consolation—a very poor one—that the Government and the people of India would be consulted before action was taken on the decisions arrived at. . . . . Is it possible to state, under the circumstances, that India has been consulted? Has not another promise been violated in the most open fashion? . . . . Those who are willing to have Home Rule for India at the end of this or perhaps the next century, or those who din into our ears that India is rapidly growing 'politically,' have much material in this incident for useful rumination. They would also do well to note how decisively India has been relegated to the humiliating background, even to the extent of keeping her ignorant of one of the most momentous moves of recent times. . . . . Shall India be left out even in the next gathering? In other words, will India be treated as a pure dependency throughout these proceedings, though the resolutions to be arrived at concern her more than any other country in the world, by reason of her vast undeveloped resources? The answer depends more on ourselves than on our rulers."

India and the Economic Conference.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 18th, 1916.

15. In a leader on this subject, New India, of the 18th July, says:—"From time to time we come across extraordinary statements: that Home Rulers want to drive the English out of India, that they are ready to rise against them and so on. The statements are almost too silly to notice, and yet that as to 'driving the English out of India' was made a few weeks ago to an old Government servant by an Indian Civil Service officer of very high standing. One cannot, therefore, quite treat them as bazaar rumours—the ne plus ultra of unintelligent panic.

Englishmen in India under Home Rule.

"Under any system of Home Rule within the Empire—and none other is being advocated in any part of India, unless in the obscure and unknown regions of anarchism—the English would remain as citizens of the Empire, and, if resident in India for a term, probably of some years, they would share with Indian-born subjects of the Imperial Crown all the rights and privileges of the citizen. . . . . The Legislative Councils and the National Parliament would be open to them, unless they were in Government Service, and that disqualification would apply equally to Indians. The highest offices in the State would be open to them as to Indians. They would not be discriminated against, as they and the Colonies discriminate against Indians. But their Church would not be supported out of the taxes, the salaries attached to every Government appointment would not be larger for white skins than for coloured, and there would be no 'Imperial' Services for them and 'Provincial' Services for Indians, no entry into a corps d'elite save by merit.

"Would this be so terrible a state of things? We quite see that the suggestion may convey a shock to the caste of white Brahmanas now established by law in India, but we agree with Macaulay that such a privileged caste ought not to exist, being qualified neither by heredity nor by acquired characters. . . . . The Indian public will gladly utilise the best residents in India, coloured or white, for executive and administrative purposes, and the idea that, on equal terms, the Englishman will not be able to 'make good' seems to suggest that under his mask of pride he suffers from a feeling of inferiority. . . . . What is the alternative? Increasing dislike and alienation. The gradual withdrawal of Indians from all social relations with the Sahibs. A formal distant exchange of greetings in unavoidable meetings. The increase in the number of such danger-signals as the retirement of members from the Allahabad Municipal Board. The growing paralysis of the administration by the standing aloof of all the best men, and the occupation of their posts by the tenth-rate."

Hindu, Madras, July 18th, 1916.

The Madras Legislative Council.

16. In a leader commenting on the results of the recent Legislative Council elections, the Hindu, of the 18th July, writes:—"We should like to urge upon Lord Pentland's Government that not only the number of non-official Members should be increased in the formation of the new Council, but that the process of nomination should be governed by principles such as will secure to the Council a better set of representatives than, with some exceptions, was the case in the last Council. It is matter of common knowledge that many of the nominations on the last occasion failed to satisfy public expectation. Important interests were left entirely unrepresented, and European representatives of one interest or another were much in evidence. The European commercial community in the Madras Presidency was represented in the Council by one representative from the Madras Chamber of Commerce, one from the Madras Trades' Association, and one from the European Planters' Association, all these three by election, as well as two nominated members of the Madras Port Trust and the South Indian Railway. The South Indian Chamber of Commerce is the organization of the Indian commercial community, and it has not been given, notwithstanding repeated requests, the privilege of electing a representative to the Legislative Council, nor did the Governor-in-Council exercise the power of nomination in favour of a member of that body. The non-recognition of the claims of the South Indian Chamber to have its representative in the local Council is, in our opinion, a patent injustice. It stands in glaring contrast with the manner in which European commercial interests are allowed excessive representation, and we hope the matter will be set right on the present occasion. Nomination of Members to the Legislative Council should also not proceed on lines favoured by the Government in the conferring of titles or even of appointing fellows of the University. . . . . Generally speaking, European non-official Members of the Council, whether elected or nominated, ape the aloofness and reserve which characterise their official friends in dealing with the people of the country and take no part or interest either in the larger public movements affecting the future of the country, or the current administrative questions other than what affect their special interests."

17. New India, of the 19th July, remarks:—"We are shocked to hear that the Fellows of the Madras University have rejected Diwan Bahadur L. A. Govindaraghava Ayyar's candidature for the Legislative Assembly, and have elected the Rev. Mr. Pittendrigh; we know the desperate efforts made to defeat Madras' able and useful citizen, some even spreading the nefarious rumour that His Excellency the Governor was going to vote for Mr. Pittendrigh, an indecent attempt to influence voters which was certainly made without His Excellency's knowledge. Mr. Pittendrigh only secured 70 votes, so that many Indian Fellows have betrayed the trust they hold and have not voted—a gross dereliction of duty."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 19th, 1916.

The Madras University seat in the Legislative Council.

18. New India, of the 19th July, has the following:—"It is very difficult to understand the policy of the Madras Government towards the press. I have always been exceedingly careful to follow every one of the very many suggestions that have been sent to me with regard to naval and military matters, information which it was thought might be useful to the enemy, and so on. . . . . Hence, when I was lately asked not to write anything that would hurt the feelings of Japan, 'our Ally', I refrained from doing so, strictures on Japan being less important to me than the advocacy of Home Rule.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 19th, 1916.

The Government of Madras and the press.

"But I read yesterday a leading article in the Madras Mail, dealing with Japanese trade, which must be most hurtful to the feelings of 'our Ally.' She is charged with dishonesty in trade, and with various objectionable practices. I cordially agree with the Madras Mail on the subject, and have long been filled with amazement over the way in which Japan is allowed to capture the German and Austrian trade, and, by flooding the market with cheap goods of a very shoddy description, to render illusory all hope of India even making bangles for her own woman at a remunerative profit on the cost of production. Now I see the Madras Mail writing freely on the subject where I was silenced. Why is an Anglo-Indian paper allowed a freedom denied to one which stands for India's self-government? It is only one case, I know, of a general policy, but the general policy is very unfair.

"ANNIE BESANT."

19. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 19th July, observes:—"If Mrs. Besant wanted consistently to work with the Congress, where is the necessity to start an organisation in England while the British Congress Committee is not yet dissolved? We have no objection to Mrs. Besant running her movements on her own account, but it is singular that on the one hand she should go about telling people that she wants to work with the Congress on Congress lines and should at the same time run movements which are diametrically opposed to its principles? The Congress has not yet pronounced in favour of immediate Home Rule; but Mrs. Besant is for it. We cannot see how consistently with her view she can continue to be in the Congress and allowed to wreck it by running movements which have no concern with it. . . . . The movement started in England at this time when public opinion in England is least likely to think of anything else than the successful prosecution of the war, is, in our opinion, only a flank movement deliberately made by Mrs. Besant to commit the Congress to her views and it is time Indian public men are warned of it."

20. The following appears in New India of the 21st July:—Mr. Bal Gangadhar Tilak attained the age of 60 yesterday according to the Hindu view, and attains it on the 23rd, according to the European calendar. All India will wish him many more years of life that he may serve the motherland. He is to be presented with a purse containing over a lakh of rupees. Mrs. Annie Besant telegraphed him her good wishes yesterday; we only mention it here, because her telegrams do not always arrive at their destinations."

III.—LEGISLATION.

WESTERN STAR, Travancore. July 15th, 1916.

The Government of India Consolidation Bill.

21. In a leader under the heading "A Controversial Measure," the Western Star, of the 15th July, writes:—"It has been the expressed desire of the rulers and the ruled alike in this country that, during the pendency of a war which demands attention and energy to the exclusion of nearly every problem which can afford to wait until peace has been restored and normal conditions have returned, controversial, contentious measures should be held in abeyance, especially those of a character which are calculated, in one way or another, to encourage the enemies of the empire, or to mar internal harmony in any undesirable respects. We do not suppose it will be very seriously contended that the people on their part have scrupulously endeavoured to give practical effect to this very patriotic and laudable desire. Two sessions of the National Congress have been held since the war began, as well as several Provincial and other Conferences, and we need hardly say that, at all these several political gatherings, contentious questions were by no means treated as Taboo. Moreover, for several months past all sections of the press have been writing with scarcely any restraint on the question of Home Rule for India, although a more controversial or contentious question can scarcely be conceived, one which is more likely than any other to provoke soreness of feeling between different classes of the community and, above all between the governing and governed classes. . . . . It is no exaggeration, we think, to say that the Home Rule controversy has been instrumental in undoing much of the real good which the war had done in the way of improving and strengthening relations between the rulers and the ruled, and even in the way of enhancing the prestige of India throughout the rest of the empire, chiefly in those self-governing regions, where, prior to the war, very incorrect notions would seem to have prevailed as regards India's importance to the rest of the empire. If, however, the people have not fulfilled their own part of the sensible pledge to leave contentious questions alone while the war lasts, it is to be feared that their rulers also have not been fully mindful of the necessity of respecting this pledge in the best interest of all concerned. . . . . We are referring to what is known as the Government of India Amending Bill. This is a piece of projected legislation which vitally affects Indian rights and privileges in several ways, and such being the case, one would have expected that, even if the Bill had been considered opportune or expedient during the war, it would have been brought up after the people of India had been made aware of the intention to introduce it. . . . . In the first place, being, on the very face of it, an extremely contentious measure the Bill should on no account have been introduced under existing conditions. . . . . Perhaps, there can be no stronger proof of the unwisdom, unpopularity and inexpediency of the Bill than the fact that the Indian and Anglo-Indian communities are unanimous in protesting vehemently against it . . . . The Bill, as we have already remarked, is an extremely contentious piece of legislation, but there are two or three provisions which are far more objectionable than all the rest, and it is against these two or three provisions that criticism has been chiefly directed here as well as in England. One of these provisions proposes conferring upon the Indian legislature the power to bar the right of the citizen to sue the Secretary of State in particular cases or classes of cases. This is a right which has been enjoyed by the people for over a century, and there have been many cases, some of them historic, in which the right has been only too well justified. The attempt to destroy this right after more than a century cannot but be strongly denounced more especially as it is being made at a time when the people are reasonably looking forward to an expansion, and not to a contraction, of their rights and liberties. . . . . The present intention appears to be to pass the Bill in September next, but, in the light of the strong objections and criticisms which have been provoked, we believe that the Governments concerned will abandon this intention and restore public confidence, as also the sense of public security, which the Bill has shaken to an extent for which it would not be easy to find a parallel."

HINDU, Madras, July 17th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 17th July, says:—"We have read with considerable amazement the reply of the Secretary of State to the London Chamber of Commerce on the subject of the Indian Consolidation Bill. Its inevitable result is to produce a feeling of utter helplessness among the people to obtain any remedy in a matter in which they apprehend grave injury to their rights and interests. The Bill now before Parliament seeks to confer on the legislatures in India the power to enact provisions taking away the right of suit in the subject against the Secretary of State for India in Council. We do not know whether any of the provincial legislatures or the Supreme Legislative Council has ever demanded that these powers should be conferred upon them or whether even the executive Government of the country, the Government of India and the various provincial administrations, have ever complained that they have been handicapped in the administration of this country for want of such a power. . . . . The Government of India and the various Local Governments should, by this time, be aware of the momentous risks they are running in permitting legislation which has given rise to a most acute controversy in this country being undertaken just at this juncture, and we trust that they will truly reflect the public opinion of this country and 'stand up for the people' as Lord Hardinge had done on more than one occasion.

"Leaving aside these weighty considerations for dropping the measure for the present, we should like to emphasise that the right of suit in a Court of law is the only safeguard in India against bureaucratic action and the analogy of the petition of right under the English law has no application to the circumstances of this country. In England the bureaucracy of the Indian type with the same aloofness from and sense of superiority to the common people, the same belief in their omniscience and the same angry impatience of criticism does not exist and cannot exist. . . . . We sincerely trust that even now better counsels will prevail, and that the Secretary of State would at least consent to a postponement of the measure till after the war. We would, in this connection, urge that public bodies in India, such as the provincial organisations, the All-India Congress Committee and the All-India Moslem League should lose no time in forwarding their protest to the Parliament against this measure."

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

UNITED INDIA AND NATIVE STATES, Madras, July 20th, 1916.

22. United India and Native States for the week ending 20th July writes:—"We take the following from the Mysore Patriot:—'Immediately after His Highness had taken his seat, and the Diwan, Councillors and respectable citizens offered their obeisance, two good-looking and beautifully dressed nautch girls danced a series of amorous dances'. We must confess that if this is based on fact it will cause the most profound disappointment throughout the country. The Mysore Darbar have done so much for the promotion of social reform that the encouragement now said to have been given to nautch girls will be universally deprecated. They have done well in banishing the dancing girls from the temples in the State and we therefore fail to understand the incident alluded to by our contemporary. We think that some mistake must have been made and hope that a press note, explaining fully the attitude of His Highness' Government towards the whole question will be issued at no distant date."

The Mysore Government and nautch girls.

UNITED INDIA AND NATIVE STATES, Madras, July 20th, 1916.

The Cochin Nayar Regulation.

23. United India and Native States for the week ending 20th July, observes:—"The Nambudris on the West Coast, with their easy going morals, are greatly perturbed at the proposed action of the Cochin Darbar who intend introducing legislation dealing with the marriage customs of the Nayars. . . . . We hope that the Diwan will ignore this opposition which besides being organised by interested parties is not conducive to the best moral interests of either the Nayars or the Nambudris. The present system is subversive of morality and we have no doubt that the Cochin Darbar will persevere in the course deliberately adopted by them. . . . . The custom is admittedly a pernicious and immoral one and we fail utterly to understand why in these enlightened days of progress and reform a responsible administration should bolster it up. We trust that His Highness the Raja and his Diwan will strive their utmost to introduce the much-needed reform in the marriage laws of the Nayars with as little delay as possible."

UNITED INDIA AND NATIVE STATES, Madras, July 20th, 1916.

Banganapalle State.

24. In a leader on this subject, United India and Native States for the week ending 20th July says:—"We have before us a copy of the Annual Administration Report of the Banganapalle State for the year 1915-16 and judging by the record of his stewardship rendered by the Diwan, Mr. Khaja Akbar Husain, there can be no doubt that this tiny principality in the Kurnool district is administered by the Nawab with singular success and devotion to his subjects' welfare. . . . . Judged from every point of view the year under review was a successful one. The finances were satisfactory, while the people, Hindus and Muhammadans, were devoted to the Nawab to an uncommon degree. The Nawab and his Diwan look into every department of the administration while they consider nothing too insignificant to engage their attention. It is the bare truth to say that much of the success achieved in the past is due to the personal interest taken by the Nawab Sahib in the work of almost every department of the administration."

KARNATAKA, Bangalore City, July 22nd, 1916.

The Government of Mysore.

25. The Karnataka, of the 22nd July, remarks:—"It is neither easy nor pleasant to criticize a Government so professedly popular (and at the same time so pronouncedly self-willed) as Sir Visvesvaraya's. Scarcely have we come across such a curious combination of an apparent desire to secure public support and a contemptuous intolerance of public criticism,—a burning zeal to make the people self-reliant and a persistent proclivity to multiply appointments and establishments. . . . . When the whole national press from the Himalayas down to the Cape is singing a sweet chorus of congratulations, many are apt to forget the wise old saying that it is distance that lends enchantment to the view; and not many are likely to remember that Indian publicists have to support an Indian administration as a matter of policy."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

Mysore Star, Mysore, July 16th, 1916.

Devastation for trivial causes.

26. The Mysore Star, of the 16th July, writes:—After stating that the devastation caused by the great war of the Mahabharatha was so great that only the single family of the conquerors remained alive at the end of it and that although every one knows the terrific nature of war, the world never gets wise enough to avoid quarrelling for trivial causes, the Amrita Bazar Patrika publishes the following imaginary conversation:

The purport of the dialogue is that a Komati annoys a Pathan by imitating his upturned moustache like the Kaiser and when the Pathan challenges him to fight a duel, the Komati first excuses himself by saying that he would not risk his life as he has a wife and children depending on him and next suggests that if both were to kill their wives and children they would be free to fight the duel, and when the Pathan goes home, slays his wife and children accordingly and comes back to renew the challenge, the Komati ends the quarrel by lowering the tip of his moustache and apologising to the Pathan.

The paper adds that America is supposed to behave towards Germany like the Komati in the above dialogue.

Malayala Manorama, Kottayam, July 19th, 1916.

The war.

27. In a long leader the Malayala Manorama, of the 19th July, dwells upon the causes that led to the failure of the Allies' attacks on Champagne and Neaux Chapelle, points out that the Allies are now meeting with successes all round and that at present their strength is increasing day by day, and observes that, if nothing unforeseen happens, it may be expected that the Germans will be completely crushed before long.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, July 18th, 1916.

"The new War Minister."

28. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 18th July, writes:—At present the name of Mr. Lloyd George is mentioned with pride not only in England but in all the countries of the world. The people disliked his policy and the Englishman which had declared him to be pro-Boer and a little Englander are now praising him.

It is this very Mr. Lloyd George who has the honour of taking in his hands the reigns of Government.

Mr. Lloyd George is not only an orator of the first rank, but experienced in the science of war as well. Most of the members of the House of Commons differ from him in politics but in other respects they agree with him.

Our King-Emperor has, at any rate, selected a most capable and suitable person who has spent the greater part of his life in the service of the country.

We fully hope that during Mr. Lloyd George's tenure of office German competition will be destroyed, our bitterest enemy will be completely defeated and peace will prevail throughout the world.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, July 15th, 1916.

Police Commissioner, Madras.

29. The Andhrapatrika, of the 15th July, remarks that the Government have overlooked the claims of such an experienced Police officer as Diwan Bahadur P. Parankusam Nayudu to the post of Police Commissioner by appointing to it a European, who was a Police Superintendent in Trichinopoly.

(b) Courts.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 15th, 1916.

The police and the magistracy.

30. The Kerala Patrika, of the 15th July, writes:—When the Police of Manjiri were holding an enquiry into a case of murder of a Moplah of Pandalur, the local Magistrate also went to the place to assist them. The Sub-Inspector and the constables saluted him; but the Circle Inspector neither saluted him nor took any notice of him. Though this breach of discipline or etiquette is trivial, it may, as pointed out by our contemporary, the West Coast Reformer, have great significance. We think that when a Police Inspector meets a Magistrate, he should treat him with respect, and that no new rule has laid down that such formalities need not be observed. If the relations between the Police and the Magistracy of a place be strained, it may cause great hardship to the people. It is, therefore, the duty of the District officers to hold an enquiry into this matter.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, July 19th, 1916.

Village courts.

31. In reviewing the report of the Collector of Malabar on the working of the village courts in that district, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 19th July, points out that the increase in the number of cases tried and disposed of by the village bench courts shows that the people are gaining confidence in them and observes that, inasmuch as the people do not think that all the amsom adhikaris who are invested with the power of trying petty civil cases are as capable and impartial as they expect them to be, it is absolutely necessary to increase the number of bench courts according to the needs of the country. It therefore hopes that the Collector will try his best to obtain the sanction of the Government to establish these courts in every taluk.

(d) Education.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 7th, 1916.

Education in vernaculars.

32. The Swadesamitran, of the 7th July, writes:—Every one will doubtless admit that the object of collegiate education is to improve the knowledge of the students and not to give them diplomas for the purpose of enabling them to enter the Government service. It is the opinion of many educationists that the present system of education, instead of spreading knowledge, aims only at conductingexaminations. The remarks made on this subject by Lala Lajpat Rai in the Modern Review and by Professor Ramalinga Reddiar clearly prove the necessity for a change in the existing system of education. For the last few years a wrong impression has got abroad that instruction in schools and colleges in India should be imparted only through English. We can understand the necessity for English literature being taught through that language. But why should other subjects also be taught in English? In every country in the world, instruction is imparted only through the language of the country and not through a foreign language. India is the only country where a foreign language forms the medium of instruction in schools. India would surely have progressed very much by this time, if the vernaculars had been the medium of instruction here.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, July 19th, 1916.

Increased facilities for medical instruction in this Presidency.

33. The Kerala Sanchari, of the 19th July, rejoices that the Government have been pleased to afford facilities for the training of more medical men in this Presidency and observes that the people should be grateful to the Government for this act of theirs. It hopes that the difficulty which the people now experience in obtaining adequate medical relief in the interior parts of the country will be removed in due course.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 17th, 1916.

Vernacular medical schools.

34. The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th July, says:—Under the arrangements now made by the Government for spreading education in medicine, there will be four medical schools with seats for 200 students. The public have to thank the Government of Madras even for this small favour. But this should not be made a reason for rejecting the proposal to establish vernacular medical schools. This Presidency needs thousands of medical practitioners. Two hundred is a very small number. We trust that the Government will soon take steps to open vernacular medical schools.

(e) Local and Municipal.

35. The Hindu Nesan, of the 7th July, approves of the suggestion made by Mr. K. V. Jambunada Ayyar of Trichinopoly that the District Municipalities should be allowed to have a representative of their own on the District Boards, and says:—As affairs stand now, it is only in some districts that one or two members of the municipalities are also on the District Boards; but they are not there as Councillors of the Municipalities. There are many advantages in a District Municipality having its representative on the District Board. He can lay before the District Board the wants of his Municipality much better than a stranger. Steps may also be taken to allow Municipalities in places other than the district head-quarters to have a representative on the respective Taluk Boards. For example, if a member of the Kumbakōnam Municipality is allowed to be on the Kumbakōnam Taluk Board, he is bound to prove immensely useful.

A sound proposal.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 7th, 1916.

36. The Hindu Nesan, of the 7th July, heartily supports the prayer of the Municipality of Srīvilliputtūr that the majority of the seats in the council should be made elective, and that it should also be allowed to have an elected Chairman, and remarks:—There are only three elected members in this Municipality now and eight nominated members. It is the Divisional officer of Sivakasi that is now the Chairman of this Municipality. Though Srīvilliputtūr is no longer the head-quarters of the Divisional officer, there are many educated men and influential merchants in that town and there are two high schools in it. So there is no necessity whatever for the Divisional officer of Sivakasi being the Chairman of this Municipality. It is hoped that the Government will readily grant the request of this municipal council that the town should be divided into seven wards, each ward being given the right of electing one councillor, and that it should also be given the privilege of electing the Chairman.

The Srīvilliputtūr Municipality.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 7th, 1916.

37. Referring to the election by the Corporation of Madras of Mr. T. Rangachariar as a member of the local Legislative Council, the Andhrapatrika, of the 13th July, says:—Rao Bahadur P. Tyāgarāya Chettiar was also a candidate. The rumour is afloat that as this gentleman holds independent views and is interested in the affairs of Mrs. Besant, the European Commissioners voted in favour of Mr. Rangachariar. In local self-government, it is bodies like the Corporation of Madras that have considerable independence. Yet these bodies are, to a great extent, under the influence of Government officers. It is a misnomer to call these bodies self-governing. An Andhra had not been elected because he held opinions of his own. But this is also a victory.

The representative of the Corporation of Madras.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 13th, 1916.

38. The Qaumi Report, of the 16th July, in a leader on the marginally-noted subject, writes:—For the last few days we have noticed a lamentable lack of lights in the streets in certain quarters.

Lights out!

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 16th, 1916.

We hear the President of the Corporation has, for some unknown reason, removed certain lamps. It is probable he wishes to substitute good power lights for the present lamps. If it is so, the relation of the future lighting to the existing darkness reminds one of the lines and the saying:—

"(1) Take what is to hand and beg no more.
"'Tis distance that lends enchantment to the view.

"(2) Before the antidote can be brought from distant Irak, the snake-bitten person will assuredly die."

It is only recently that the lighting-tax was raised from 1¼ to 2 per cent, and it was hoped that there would be a corresponding increase in lights and lamps, but —

"What we thought was wrong."

The President of the Corporation has probably not inspected the darknesses of these narrow streets. If, for the sake of tax-payers, he would but take the trouble for once to see things with his own eyes he would find the state of Madras not a whit behind in inconvenience that of those cities where from fear of attacks from aircraft enforced darkness is the rule! We have visited some of these streets ourselves and have seen the people stumbling along and then muttering "Ah me! Kerosine has also run short!"

It is deplorable that the commissioners of certain divisions are disinclined to take any interest in the convenience and comfort of the unfortunate people. The commissioners regard either the lights in their own streets as samples of the illumination of all the streets in the city or that the electric lights of their own houses suffice for others as well! It is true that the commissioners are powerless to bring these matters into light except at a meeting of the corporation whenever that is held. But are they equally powerless to see people and explain things to them?

We have learnt from a private source that up to the present 1,882 lamps have been removed. Can any enlightened member of the corporation imagine what proportion of the total lights of the city has been taken away? The corporation may, of course, mend and improve matters, but not by having people groping their way in the dark!

The police regulate the traffic and have the power to stop and arrest the poor cartmen; but in the case of the corporation not only are they powerless to interfere, but, like the people, they have to put up with the inconvenience of finding their way in the dark.

In the interests of the welfare of the public the Police Commissioner might consider whether a street in darkness is not a greater source of danger than a cart without lights! We hope the Corporation will deal with this question at next Tuesday's meeting.

(f) Land Revenue and Settlement.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 18th, 1916.

A record of rights.

39. Referring to the order of the Government of Madras requesting the Board of Revenue to consult officials and non-officials and report on the proposed improvement of the system of revenue registry and preparation of a record of rights for this Presidency, the Andhrapatrika, of the 18th July, hopes that the Government will arrange for a detailed enquiry that will not end in smoke.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 14th, 1916.

The land revenue policy of the Government of India.

40. The Manorama, of the 14th July, observes:—Whatever may have been the causes which have induced the Government of India to delay the publication of their Despatch on the land revenue policy in India, it is deplorable that they should have so long kept secret a paper dealing with vital questions affecting the people of this country. While in all civilised countries the land-tax is fixed and revised with the sanction of the Legislature, and while the Royal Commission on Decentralisation have recommended that the Legislative Councils in India should be vested with powers to settle questions relating to land-tax, the Government of India think that, if such a step be taken, it will be injurious to the interests of the ryots, and greatly tend to increase the litigation in this country. But it is doubtful whether the arguments advanced by this Government in support of their contention will satisfy the people. The late Mr. R. C. Dutt, a member of the Decentralisation Commission, the Indian National Congress, and the whole weight of public opinion in India are in favour of the recommendations of this Commission, and the Despatch of the Government of India and the reply of the then Secretary of State will, no doubt, cause great disappointment to the people.

Referring to the same subject, the Kerala Patrika, of the 15th July, says:—Though the recommendation of the Decentralisation Commission that the Legislative Councils in India should be given the power of settling the land-tax, as in the case of the other taxes is, no doubt, just and reasonable, it is not surprising that the Government of India are not in favour of this proposal, which means that the executive is to be divested of the power which they now enjoy, and the law courts are to be invested with the power of deciding the justice or otherwise of the periodical enhancement of the land-tax. This proposal, if given effect to, will be a great boon to the people, but it is doubtful whether the Secretary of State will be prepared to do so, in spite of the opposition of the supreme Government.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 15th, 1916.

(g) Forests.

41. A correspondent of the Swadeshabhimani, of the 14th July, subscribing himself "A poor ryot", complains:—In Kollamogra village (South Canara) there is a big maidan called Doddadka nearly 200 acres in extent attached to the reserved forest known as Nālkur block. Nearly 500 cattle graze on this ground every day from time immemorial. There is no other convenient grazing ground for these cattle. The people were also enjoying the unrestricted right of removing thatch from this maidan. The grazing however was allowed only on payment of a fee. Like all other forests this maidan is sometimes seen to be destroyed by fire, contrary to the Forest rules. It has never been possible to detect the authors of this mischief. This year, however, the Forest department has taken all the villagers to task by prohibiting both grazing and removal of thatch and thus "punished Peter for Paul's crime".

A forest grievance in South Canara.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 14th, 1916.

(h) Railways.

42. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 15th July, in its news columns, observes:—Some of the third-class compartments are usually reserved for Europeans. Others were hitherto not allowed to enter these carriages, or, if they entered they were being dragged out. It is now ruled in a recent case that where the people are put to inconvenience owing to want of accommodation in the train the travellers are free to enter and travel in the compartments reserved for Europeans and that it does not amount to violation of any law to do so and further that railway servants obstructing passengers in so doing may be complained against.

"Reserved for Europeans."

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, July 15th, 1916.

43. The Sahifa, of the 17th July, writes:—We have received the two following complaints:—(1) In the case of ordinary people they are very strict in requiring platform tickets while well-dressed folk, or those who don a coat and trousers, are passed in without question. Such distinction is unjust. Either there should be no platform tickets or all should be required to provide themselves with them. The application, or relaxation of the rule, should have nothing to do with the neatness or shabbiness of a person's dress. This is bound to cause general dissatisfaction.

(2) The zenana waiting room is kept locked and the key entrusted to the rickshaw men. The result is purdah ladies, who wish to use the rickshaw, are put to inconvenience, while those zenana ladies who desire to stay in the waiting room and are averse to using the rickshaw have no choice on the matter. Both complaints appear to be reasonable, and we hope the Railway Company will give its attention to these matters and remove the causes of these complaints.

SAHIFA, Hyderabad, July 17th, 1916.

(k) General.

44. In the course of a leader under this heading, the Tamil supplement to South Indian Mail, of the 26th June,* observes:—The valour exhibited by the Indian England, Ireland and India.

SOUTH INDIAN MAIL, Madura, June 26th, 1916.

* Received in the current week.

troops at the front has been the subject of praise on all sides. That it has been appreciated by His Majesty himself is clear from the large number of Victoria Crosses awarded to the Indians. Even as members of the ambulance corps, the Bengalees and other Indians have made a mark. The Indians have proved their capacity not only in the army, but also in politics, by successfully discharging the duties of the high posts held by them. How can itbe said then that they are unfit for swaraj? Recently there was a big rebellion in Ireland, which resulted in serious loss of life and property. This rebellion was duly suppressed by the authorities and the rioters were punished adequately. Not stopping with this, they have deputed Mr. Lloyd George to prepare a scheme for the grant of Home Rule for Ireland temporarily, in order to pacify the people, whose discontent has been found to be the cause of the riots. We are really glad that, instead of curtailing the privileges of the people of Ireland as a penalty for some of them having created a serious disturbance, the English statesmen have decided to grant Home Rule to them. In India, the loyalty of the people has often been praised by Lord Hardinge and other statesmen and we hope, that, when the war comes to an end and reforms are introduced in connection with the Empire, the whole of this country will not be condemned on account of the disturbances caused by some stupid persons here and there, and that the same consideration will be shown to her as has been shown to Ireland and her position raised to that occupied by the colonies.

SOUTH INDIAN MAIL, Madura, July 3rd, 1916.

Union between the rulers and the ruled.

45. The Tamil supplement to the South Indian Mail, * of the 3rd July, compares the rapid progress made in the development of industries in Mysore with the lethargy of the Industrial department in British India, and dwelling upon the facility afforded by the Economic Conference held periodically in Mysore for the officials and the popular representatives to exchange their ideas about improving the economic condition of the State, observes that in this respect Mysore is in a position to teach some lessons to British India.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 7th, 1916.

The next meeting of the Senate.

46. The Swadesamitran, of the 7th July, observes:—Of the propositions to be brought forward at the next meeting of the Senate, the one which refers to the abolition of the new three years' course in law is very necessary. As the new course has already caused much hardship and dissatisfaction, it is desirable to revert to the old order of things, though it is only one year since the new scheme was introduced. The proposal to request men like Dr. Jagadish Chunder Bose to deliver special lectures is also a sound one. When Western Universities have arranged for lectures by Mr. Bose and other eminent Indians, it is really funny that the Madras University should send for lecturers at great expense from foreign countries. Apart from the question of expenditure, University lectures by Indians will not only improve the knowledge of the Indian students more rapidly, but will also improve their feeling of self-respect.

Of the subjects to be considered by the special meeting of the Senate, the one relating to the heavy slaughter at the recent Intermediate examination is very important. The public opinion is that this is due to the severity of the examiners. In western countries, the questions set at an examination are intended only to test the general knowledge of the students in the subjects read by them and not to see whether the students have read every page and every line of the prescribed books. In no country can the students be said to be as ardent in the matter of education as in India, nor are the Indian students inferior in any way to the students in western countries in intelligence or earnestness. If among such students, a large majority fail in the examinations every year, what is the wonder in their being dissatisfied! The Principal of the Government College in Kumbakōnam is surprised at the majority of his students having failed, and is not able to account for it. What further evidence is required to prove that the present system of examinations should be changed?

* Received in the current week.

47. The Hindu Nesan, of the 7th July, writes:—We have reason to think that the hatred of the Europeans against the Indians often exhibits itself, in spite of the serious efforts made by prominent members of both the communities to strengthen the bond of friendship between them, merely because it is ingrained in them. The members of the European club at Coonoor recently objected to the Maharaja of Travancore purchasing a bungalow in that place on the ground that it was close to their club. This is one instance of the innate hatred of the Europeans against Indians; for the Europeans of Coonoor have exhibited their hatred against an Indian in spite of the fact that many Europeans enjoy the friendship of, and are serving under, the Maharaja of Travancore. The action of the Government in having listened to the protest of these Europeans and prevented the Maharaja from purchasing the bungalow has caused great dissatisfaction.

The East is East and the West is West.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 7th, 1916.

48. The Hindu Nesan, of the 8th July, applauds the action of Lord Carmichael in having boldly announced in his first speech in the new Legislative Council that he has gone against the usual routine in omitting to nominate the five Secretaries of the Government, the Secretaries to the Board Commissioners and the Vice-Chairman of that Commission as Members of this Council, and dilates upon the courage with which this Governor has been satisfying the demands of the people, ignoring the opposition of the bureaucracy.

The new Legislative Council in Bengal.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 8th, 1916.

49. The Swadesamitran, of the 10th July, is surprised at the Government of India publishing after six years its Despatch to the Secretary State regarding the recommendations of the Decentralisation Commission that the regulations connected with the collection of land revenue should be passed into law, and the reply of the Secretary of State thereto and observes:—The point to be noted here is the definite assertion by the Government of India that the Government is the owner of all lands in this country and that the landholders are only ryots cultivating these lands for the Government. That this is an entirely erroneous view goes without saying, no time should therefore be lost by our leaders to impress this fact on the Government. We are really sorry to find that the Despatch of the Government of India containing this view has been signed by Sir S. P. Sinha, who was in the Imperial Executive Council then. It is strange that this gentleman, who supported this view six years back, should have as President of the Congress last year quietly allowed a resolution to be passed suggesting certain reforms in the existing land revenue. Perhaps the Government of India requested the Secretary of State not to give effect to this particular recommendation of the Decentralisation Commission "for the present" because it feared that Lord Morley, who was then the Secretary of State, would not agree to a proposal to throw it away finally. Anyhow "the addition of the words for the present" shows that the subject can be considered again, if necessary. As Lord Hardinge observed, India has progressed very fast within the last six years, and as England and the Colonies have begun to look on her with a sympathetic eye, we hope the present Secretary of State will take up this subject again for consideration and pass final orders on its own merits and after ascertaining the opinion of the people of this country, who are the parties to be affected by it directly.

The Government and the land revenue.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

In commenting upon the same subject, the Hindu Nesan, of the 11th July, says:—It is the land revenue system obtaining in India that affects the economic condition of the people. If the Government collects the major portion of the income of the landholder from his land as land revenue, the condition of the agriculturists will never improve. Such being the case, the views expressed by the Government of India in its Despatch to the Secretary of State seem to be curious. The delay in its publication is attributed to the fact that, at the time when this Despatch was sent up, the reformed Legislative Councils had just come into existence and therefore it was thought that it would be undesirable to publish it then. But having delayed it all these six years, it is really strange that the Government has published it now, when the consideration of any contentious measure is avoided. What do the authorities gain by persisting in retaining in their own hands the power of increasing the land revenue at their pleasure and opposing an attempt to subject the process of collecting this revenue to legal restrictions? The officials say that embodying the rules connected with the collection of land revenue in a statute will only cause inconvenience to the ryots, as they will not then be in a position to show any concession to ryots in bad seasons. All these arguments are of no avail.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant and the Government of Bombay.

50. The Swadesamitran, of the 10th July, is surprised at the order issued by the Government of Bombay prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering that Presidency, and says that this unreasonable order is one instance to prove how the authorities can use their powers arbitrarily under the Defence of India Act, whether their action has any reference to the war or not.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 12th, 1196.

The same paper, of the 12th July, reproduces the substance of the comments of the following papers on this subject:—The Panjabee, the Bengalee, the Amrita Bazaar Patrika and the Tribune.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, July 17th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant and the Bombay Government.

Referring to the order of the Bombay Government prohibiting Mrs. Besant to enter any part of the Bombay Presidency, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 17th July, says:—Although it must be conceded that, in the interests of public safety, it is necessary that the Government should be free to exercise extraordinary powers, such as those conferred by the Defence of India Act, in critical times like the present, and although, in view of the signs of unrest in Bengal and the Punjab, it is natural that the Government should extend the provisions of the Defence of India Act to these Provinces, we fail to see what there could possibly be to justify the extension of that Act to the Bombay Presidency and the enforcement of its provisions against Mrs. Besant. It would be just to apply the Act to an enemy of the country. We are not among the admirers of the whole of Mrs. Besant's past, but we believe that her political activity is such as to increase the cordiality between the British and the Indians. She is fighting for Home Rule for India and the British Government too is preparing to grant it to us. The more just-minded among the British themselves are against the policy of keeping India alone under bureaucratic rule while the whole of the United Kingdom as well as the colonies are enjoying Home Rule. Mrs. Besant is one of these just-minded Britishers. The Bombay Government must have had some strong grounds for acting as they did. A section of the public, however, is under the belief that she is only fighting in the interests of the empire and is its true friend and may, therefore, very well go to any part of the empire. It is for the Imperial Government to decide whether this belief is well-founded, or whether the action of the Bombay Government is just. The latter will not have passed the order without due deliberation. It would be well to await the reasons underlying the order.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, July 14th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant and the Bombay Government.

Referring to the order of the Bombay Government prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering the Bombay Presidency, the Yogakshemam, of the 14th July, says:—It has not come to our notice that Mrs. Besant has said or written anything prejudicial to the British Supremacy in India. We think that such a severe punishment for advocating the cause of India is likely to give room to the people to misconstrue the object of the Government. We also hear that the Bombay Government have forbidden the press to make any comments on this order. All that they do is done after taking great precaution. This order of the Bombay Government will even prevent Mrs. Besant from going to England.

On the same subject, the Kerala Patrika, of the 15th July, writes :—The Bombay Government must have passed such an order, because they were afraid that the writings and speeches of Mrs Besant on Home Rule may be misunderstood by the uneducated people, who in Bengal and Bombay, generally resort to acts of violence against the Government and the people. Even if the people have no right to ask why the Government had recourse to the extraordinary powers conferred on them by the Defence of India Act, they would like to know the reasons that have induced the Government to take such a step. In any case, it has to be admitted that the Bombay Government acted rather harshly in this matter.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 15th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Keralodayam, of the 18th July, points out that, though the order of Government does not state the reasons for taking this step, the readers of New India may be aware that it is the vigorous writings and eloquent speeches of that versatile lady on Home Rule that must have induced the Government to pass such an order, and observes that the grand old lady will do well to be quiet till the conclusion of the war, instead of being led away by the belief that she can say and do anything, because she is a European.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, July 18th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant and the Bombay Government.

Referring to the order of the Bombay Government prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering the Bombay Presidency, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 19th July, says :—We do not know what it is that has induced the Government to take this step. The speeches and writings of Mrs. Besant, an English lady, show that she is loyal to the crown. Her love for India is unbounded and she is doing all in her power for the uplift of this country. It would be a great pity indeed if these punishments are inflicted on her because the authorities here do not approve of what she does for the attainment of self-government for India.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, July 19th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant and the Bombay Government.

Referring to the notice served on Mrs. Besant by the Government of Bombay, the Andhraprakasika, of the 12th July, says :—To say that the books, the papers, the pamphlets, and the lectures of Mrs Annie Besant are prejudicial to public safety is to give them prominence and an advertisement. So long as the authority of the Government is strong, the people will not entertain the fear that their safety will be prejudiced by useless words or by scraps of paper. It is to be regretted that the Government of Bombay have been alarmed by the activity of Mrs. Besant while the people are free from any fear. They will do well to consider deeply and adopt peaceful methods instead of resorting to repression and stirring up discontent.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 12th, 1916.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 15th July, comments on the order of the Bombay Government prohibiting the Bombay newspapers from entering into a discussion of the notice served by them on Mrs. Besant, and remarks :—The Government are suspecting the people more and more every day. It is only the newspapers that can serve as a mirror of the hearts of the people. It is impossible for the officers of the Criminal Investigation Department to enter those hearts. But the organs of public opinion have many royal roads by which they can find access to the innermost recesses of the people's hearts. It is, therefore, improper on the part of the Bombay Government to have gagged the press in their Presidency in the way in which they did.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 15th, 1916.

"The order of the Bombay Government."

51. The Qaumi Report, of the 15th July, in a leading article, writes :—Mrs. Annie Besant, the editor of New India, has been ordered by the Bombay Government not to enter the Province. We do not know what magic Mrs. Besant was about to perform in Bombay. Were there any genuine grounds for the apprehension that Mrs. Annie Besant's footfall would startle the people of Bombay in their sleep and disturb peaceful slumbers? We have seen and heard Mrs. Besant, but her voice has never overwhelmed us with fear, nor has it ever entered our minds that her ideas might make us crazy.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 15th, 1916.

One of Mrs. Besant's ideas is Home Rule but even in that we have not been conscious of any poisonous sting or bitter taste. It is an idea, but mere entertainment of ideas does not constitute an offence.

We have heard with interest that the Bombay Government has prohibited all the papers of the Province from saying or doing anything in the matter. Mrs. Besant's case is purely a local one, but the Bombay Government has, by its emphatic prohibition, made it an outside question as if it were some secret plot by a foreign power!

Whatever newspapers write is written with the object of removing misunderstandings on the part of the Government and of saving it from self-interested persons and flatterers. Newspapers are supposed to be the enemies of the Government or at least not to have any sympathy with it. It is lamentable that the rulers are not aware of the grievances of newspapers and that the press does not deserve to be regarded in the light in which they regard it.

Such a step would have been in order if any offence had been proved against Mrs. Besant, or if any Government had brought home to her the responsibility for any specific Act. We should have then understood that she had contravened such and such a section of such and such an Act. In this case, however, the offence is a secret while punishment is obvious. The Government of Bombay may possibly be aware of the offence, and does not desire to make it known, in which case, we think, it should face newspaper criticism.

We loyally submit no Government should have occasion to be displeased with the press. Recently Mr. Herbert Samuel, the Home Secretary, gave expression to a sensible policy when he remarked, "If the Government was criticised he did not mind it and that if any newspaper criticised his actions or those of any other Cabinet Minister, he would not take proceedings against it. If such criticism were well-founded, it should be published for the public benefit; if not, well-founded the best answer would be to treat it with silent contempt."

It is regrettable that it is altogether different in the case of newspapers in India, Calcutta, Punjab and Madras papers are criticising the action of the Bombay Government which has made its own press agree to observe a strict silence in the matter. We think this is the first case of its kind in the experience of the press in India. In foreign affairs such difficulties have, of course, arisen. An exchange of ideas between the authorities and the representatives of the press has however been generally found to be beneficial, but such mutual relations should not go beyond an exchange of ideas.

If the Government of Bombay has reasonable grounds for its action and has communicated these grounds to the newspapers of the Province which in consequence of these enlightenment are maintaining a strict silence in the matter, why should the Punjab, Bengal and Madras papers be kept in the dark? Does the Bombay Government wish the Bombay papers to observe silence in a matter which is discussed by the rest of the Indian press? It is difficult for us to believe that there are just grounds for the order.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore, July 19th, 1916.

Mrs. Annie Besant.

52. The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 19th July, writes:—Mrs. Besant through her theosophical movement, not only brought to the notice of the western countries all that is best in Hinduism but made the Indians themselves take greater pride in their own religion. Now, seeing that the Indians are not allowed a due share in the administration of their country, she is struggling to remove this defect and in order to gain her object she is pointing out the shortcomings of the officers of Government by means of strong and trenchant criticism in her New India. The officials annoyed at this have demanded a cash security of Rs. 2,000 from her, and further the Bombay Government have ordered her not to set foot on their territory. The whole of the Indian press is bewailing the sight of her suffering for the good of the Indians and this forms, almost every day at present, the most important topic discussed in every newspaper in India.

53. In an article under this heading, the Bharathi, of the 14th July, writes:—Mrs. Besant has scarcely had time to wipe her eyes after the storm which arose in the shape of the security order when she has to face a fresh hurricane which comes from the Bombay administrators. The Madras Government demanded a security and the Bombay Government have now forbidden her to enter their territory. What can we do? Every educated person knows that those who work for the good of the people have always an unceasing series of hardships to face. We are altogether in the dark as to why the Bombay Government have assumed this stern attitude towards Mrs. Besant and what her faults really are. The news has caused profound regret in all quarters. We hope that His Excellency Lord Chelmsford, who has promised to follow in the footsteps of his illustrious predecessor Lord Hardinge, will now display the liberality of his mind and earn the fame which such statesmanship merits.

Another storm against Mrs. Besant.

BHARATHI, Bellary, July 14th, 1916.

54. In reviewing the report on the working of the Indian Factories Act in the Madras Presidency for 1915, the Andhrapatrika, of the 14th July, says:—The industrial life of our Presidency was in the same lethargic condition as ever before. From an examination of the enquiries made here and there, it will be found that industries did not attract any from among the agriculturists while those engaged in industrial pursuits left them and took to agriculture. No greater proof is needed to show that industrial life in this Presidency is at a low ebb. Yet it is said that our Presidency is receiving the greatest encouragement at the hands of the Government in the matter of industries.

Industries.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 14th, 1916.

55. The Andhrapatrika, of the 14th July, says:—In our country there are no indications of the industries improving. Neither do the Government impose protection duties nor do they practically advance the industries. The restrictions imposed on the Industrial Commission are such as will not enable it to suggest freely the ways by which the industries may be improved. The authorities are opposed to giving self-government to us. The repressive measures intended for one purpose are applied to all purposes. The Defence of India Act has been enforced against persons like Mrs. Besant in matters quite unconnected with the war. No officer thinks of the question of enlisting the Indians in the army. There is no indication that the provisions of the Arms Act and the Press Act will be relaxed. Securities are demanded everywhere. Important laws affecting India are passed in England without consulting us. Our protests are unheeded. Even the unanimous voice of the Indians and the Anglo-Indians is ignored. English statesmen are not going to trouble themselves about India when the fabric of the empire is to be reconstituted after the war. It is under these circumstances doubtful if the authorities have changed their angle of vision in regard to India. But England, the British Empire and the world cannot but recognise the rights of the Indians. The issue of India received today reviews the work of a certain English author who says that India ought to be represented at the Imperial Conference. From his writings it will be clear that in future no great importance will be attached to colour. Economic and political considerations will in future form the basis of and decide all reforms. We have to show ourselves to be men possessing self-endeavour and we will certainly obtain justice.

Industries and the Imperial Conference.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 14th, 1916.

56. In an article on the subject of the tours of officers, the Andhrapatrika, of the 15th July, says:—Our Government rely on the arbitrary reports of their officers in administering the country. The Indian press is not free. It does not freely ventilate the grievances of the people. The touring officers of the Government do not personally hear the representations of the ryots. They eat dinners and rest satisfied with the words of the local authorities. If they condescend to receive any address from the public, that address undergoes many a change at the hands of the local officers before it reaches the touring Tours.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 15th, 1916.

officer. Some of the officers to whom addresses are presented give liberal answers while the others dispose them of in two or three words. The officers do not mix with the people. Under such circumstance, how are His Majesty's representatives to know the real state of affairs? These tours involve an unduly large expenditure of public money. The expenditure on tours in India taken as a whole has almost doubled during the last four years although it is gratifying that the Madras Government spent less in 1914 than in 1910. The financial problem in India is becoming more and more difficult to solve. Wherever possible, the expenditure ought to be reduced, and the money saved shoud be devoted to more useful matters.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 5th, 1916.

The Desamata, of the 5th July, says:—Large sums of money are lavished on the official tours of Governors and in the payment of high salaries to European officers. There are among Indians men who are in every way qualified to hold the offices now held by the Europeans. If they are appointed, they need not be paid such high salaries. Funds can thus be saved for useful purposes. Gubernatorial tours are not productive of much good, while they are very costly. Ryots are not enabled to represent their grievances personally to the Governors. In answer to addresses, the Governors hold out hopes to the people and there the matters end. Mr. Wacha is, therefore, right in saying in the recent meeting of the Bombay Legislative Council that it is improper to waste much money on gubernatorial tours.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 5th, 1916.

Legislative Councils.

57. The Desamata, of the 5th July, remarks that although under the reforms of Lord Morley and Lord Minto the non-official members of the Legislative Councils have been vested with power to discuss the budget, no good comes out of the discussion because the suggestions of non-officials are not accepted.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 17th, 1916.

Indian commerce.

58. The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th July, says:—If direct representation is not given to India at the Imperial Council of Commerce, which is to meet to decide the policy of trade to be pursued after the war, the commercial interests of India will never be safeguarded. The interests of England and India clash with one another in some points, and entire reliance cannot be placed in England in the matter of the economic advancement of this country. We have to make a powerful representation and obtain direct representation at the Imperial Council so that we may discuss the matters in issue and enter into mutual agreement with the other countries. It is the duty of the Government of India to help us in this attempt.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, July 9th, 1916.

Dacoities and murders in Bengal.

59. Referring to the murderous dacoities and other outrages in Bengal, the Desabhimani, of the 9th July, says:—The people hate the dastardly acts of the murderers, but they are helpless. If the people are allowed to bear arms, they will certainly help the Government in arresting the offenders. The Government should not pass repressive laws, being panic-stricken, but should follow the policy of Lord Hardinge. Although the Irish people have committed many outrages, the English Government have excused them and are granting them Home Rule. The Indians are, unlike the Irish, a peaceful people and we pray that self-government under the British raj may be granted to India.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 12th, 1916.

Referring to the anarchical outrages in Bengal, the Desamata, of the 12th July, says:—Not a few young men in India desire earnestly to go to the war front and fight for the empire. We cannot say that there are no anarchists among those young men, but patriotism is a sovereign remedy for their frenzied brains. If orders be issued for raising an army of Indian young men, a wave of enthusiasm will spread over the country and the anarchic movement will be washed away. If the Indians are rejected as unfit to fight on behalf of the empire, the enemies of the Government will make mountains of mole hills and will always be bent on doing mischief. If the Government possess real statesmanship, they will do well to raise an army of Indian young men and this is the most potent way of stamping out the anarchism in the country.

60. The Desamata, of the 5th July, says:—In this country there is no political agitation properly so-called. We have only the shadow of it, conducted by lawyers and other educated classes. Although it is now 30 or 40 years since the Indian National Congress had its birth, its influence has not reached the masses as yet. As only a few out of the 31 crores of Indians conduct the Congress and Conferences, it is wrong to say that there is political agitation in India. It can exist only when the masses have at least the shadow of political learning, and when they know how differently this country is constituted politically from others.

Political agitation in India.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 5th, 1916.

61. The Desamata, of the 5th July, learns that under a system of compulsory recruitment in England, incompetent persons also are enlisted in the army to meet the large demand for men to fight, and hopes that the Government of India will be empowered to raise a large army of Indians. It says that an Indian army will at this juncture be of immense help to the British and serve as a source of great relief to them.

An Indian army.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 5th, 1916.

62. Referring to the exclusion of India from the Paris Conference the Desamata, of the 12th July, says:—India has only duties to perform, but has no power to enjoy any rights equally with the British or with the people of the Colonies. If she had any such power, she would surely have been represented at the Paris Conference. Indians are next to none in their loyalty and devotion to the throne, and under such circumstances, it is difficult to understand why we are treated with scant courtesy while the Colonists are highly honoured. The people are not quite wrong in supposing that such is the lot of countries having no right of self-government. Our countrymen have to protest against their exclusion from the Paris Conference and see that they are represented at least at future conferences.

The Paris Conference.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 12th, 1916.

63. In an article dilating upon Germany's hold upon the dye industry and the abnormally high prices that are being paid for dyes at present, the Bharathi, of the 14th July, says that the indigenous dye industry in India is as helpless and degenerate today as it was flourishing at one time, and that it is most unfortunate that the dye expert Mr. Marsden should altogether despair of profitably utilising the indigenous dye-stuffs. The paper next urges that the people and the Government should both strive to seize the present opportunity of reviving this industry.

The Indian dye industry.

BHARATHI, Bellary, July 14th, 1916.

64. In an article urging that India should be granted self-government under parliamentary bodies on the lines of the British constitution, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 19th July, writes:—If the whole country should unanimously and constantly urge these administrative changes, India will be sure to obtain parliamentary rule in the course of the next four or five years. We do not say that there will be no opposition to these reforms. But if we are unanimous in demanding a parliamentary constitution, the opposition is bound to disappear. Like the dew melting away before the summer sun, these enemies to just reform must cease to be. The British are born champions of democratic rule. It is after they go to foreign countries that they develop anti-democratic tendencies. These tendencies of later growth are easily rooted out and then the inherent instinct will prevail. Although a few Englishmen might oppose the grant of self-government to us, we must not allow ourselves to be disheartened by their opposition. We shall be sure to reach our goal if we only persevere fearlessly.

The grant of self-government.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, July 19th, 1916.

65. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 18th July, writes:—This year's session of the Congress will mark the reunion of the moderate and extremist sections which had stood unreconciled to each other since the Surat session. Much discussion is going on as to who should be elected President this year. The masses are unanimous in claiming that India should be granted self-governing rights as in the colonies. The editor of the Amrita Bazaar Patrika and others are urging that Mrs. Besant, as the champion of the Home Rule cause, should have the honour of presiding this year. There is no one better qualified for it in the whole world. But the Bombay Government have forbidden her to enter the Bombay Presidency, and if the Imperial and the Home authorities are in agreement with the views of the Bombay Government in this respect, it behoves us to consider whether it would be expedient to appoint her as President.

SWADESABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 14th, 1916.

Home Rule for India.

66. In continuation of the article in its previous issue (vide Report No. 29, article 60) the Swadeshabhimani, of the 14th July, observes that although those who hold that social reform must precede political reform are never likely to concur with the view that Swaraj alone can pave the way to all political as well as social reform, it will at least be seen that social reform by itself will not qualify a people for self-government, for, if that were so, there are countries such as Burma, where the people are socially free in regard to widow marriage, religious liberty and all those reforms which the reformers would like to see introduced before political reform is aimed at and by that kind of argument a people like the Burmese would be the best qualified for self-government.

SWADESABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 14th, 1916.

The grievances of South Canara.

67. In a leading article congratulating Mr. K. S. Bhat on his success at the recent election to the Madras Legislative Council by the Local Boards and Municipalities of South Canara and Malabar, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 14th July, thanks the voters of Malabar for supporting the candidature of a South Canara representative this time and thereupon observes: Our district is generally supposed to be free from all grievances because no complaints of any kind are made to Government. The district is broken up by party feeling, petty feuds and mutual distrust among the people and want of knowledge of their larger interests. It is well known that an officer if he feels a little reluctant to enter our district for the first time, he is ten times more reluctant to leave it. A glance at the Fort St. George Gazette will show that it is peculiar to South Canara that officers transferred from here seek again and again to return to the same district. This is because each community in trying to promote its own good, seeks to prejudice the rest in the eyes of the officers by carrying tales and consequently no one has the courage to speak out any grievance openly. The main shortcomings which it behoves the representative of the district to urge on the attention of the Government are —(1) The Legislative Council has not framed any enactment as yet in regard to the mulgeni tenure of South Canara. Although the present term of settlement is about to expire, the poor wargdar stands still aggrieved. Secondly, as the Forest Committee did not visit and see the grievances of the people in person, forest areas are still allowed to remain too close to inhabited tracts, with the result that valuable cattle fall a prey to wild beasts. Thirdly, in order to grant house sites to the poor, the people were deprived of their pasturage. The sites, however, are not yet ready for occupation. Fourthly, the proposal to connect the district with Mysore by a railway remains still undecided. The railway-cess is being still collected, and there is therefore a proposal to construct a line at least to Panemangalore. But no one knows what benefit would be gained thereby. If we do not co-operate with Mysore when they are keen on the subject, they will naturally leave us to our own fate and seek their advantage elsewhere. Fifthly, the district is without proper educational facilities. There are numerous villages with a population of over a thousand and yet without a school. Most of the schools managed by the Local Boards are without proper buildings. Incomplete secondary schools are in a very unsatisfactory condition. The Government College which was organised by the people themselves has not yet been raised to the first grade. The number of seats obtainable at the College at present is very limited. There are very few schools for girls, and even these are without proper supervision. Inspectresses and Assistant Inspectresses unacquainted with the vernacular of the district are entrusted with the work of supervising them. There is thus only an increase in the strength of the schools but the management is not properly controlled. School mistresses who do not know English are required to do their correspondence with their superior officers in English. Although officers who know the vernacular are available in the department, the authorities have failed to appoint them to such places. Lastly, owing to the dearth of funds among the Local Boards, there are no dispensaries in several places and even at the existing dispensaries the supplies are very meagre. Travelling during the rainy season is rendered extremely difficult in the rural parts, owing to the absence of bridges over streams and rivulets. Consequently the officers of Government seldom visit these parts and the wargdars have become autocratic, as it were, in consequence.

The Government of India Loan.

68. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 15th July, writes:—It is obvious that our just Emperor George V drew the sword entirely out of sympathy and disinterestedness and undertook to incur a heavy war-expenditure running into crores of pounds. Therefore, it is the bounden duty of us, loyal subjects, to maintain internal safety and peace by rendering pecuniary aid to the Government.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, July 15th, 1916.

It is a matter of pride to us that the administration of the country of our just Emperor, whose subjects we are and under whose rule we live, is satisfactory, peace and tranquility reign supreme and the Government which has the well-being of the people at heart is a properly constituted one.

We see that from the very beginning of the war Great Britain has given much pecuniary assistance to her Allies while she has to spend personally considerable amounts of money in opposing the formidable foe who had for years been secretly making preparations for war. At the present moment the war-expenditure is on the increase. Hence the Government of India has issued a notification regarding the Government of India Conversion Loan for the years 1916–17 which may be obtained through the post office. Previous to this the Government had issued a similar notification, but it is a matter for regret that the required amount could not be realised. Are true Indian subjects not able to respond to Great Britain's urgent call? It is enough to make one pause to think that when the Government demands money as a loan, we should grudge a little sacrifice which, as a matter of fact, redounds to our own advantage.

Pious and generous fellow countrymen have rendered help to wounded British soldiers. The writer advises people of means and supporters of the Government to respond to the call and to consider it to be a matter of duty and an opportunity for demonstrating to the people of foreign countries that Indians are staunch in their loyalty to the British crown, that they are ever ready to sacrifice life and property, and that in addition to subscribing to various funds they have lent more money than was required.

III.—LEGISLATION.

The Bill to amend the Indian Consolidation Act.

69. In commenting upon the proceedings of the public meeting held in Madras to protest against this Bill being passed into law, the Hindu Nesan, of the 10th July, invites the attention of the authorities to the fact that the Bill is opposed in India by all people alike, Indians and Anglo-Indians, and adds that the House of Lords will be doing wanton injustice to India if it passes this Bill in the face of the unanimous opposition of the people of this country.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 10th, 1916.

Referring to this subject, the Swadesamitran, of the 11th July, repeats its arguments against every provision in this Bill and observes:—Amending Bills are brought forward usually only for the purpose of making verbal alterations in existing Acts. But this Bill proposes to introduce many objectionable changes and to take away certain important privileges now enjoyed by the people. It will never be possible in a country where popular opinion is heard to curtail the privileges of the people, without their being allowed to have their say in the matter. The fact that this Bill is being pushed through in spite of popular opposition goes only to prove the extent of arbitrary authority exercised by the bureaucracy in this country. When the Indian Consolidation Act was passed last year, Mr. Roberts, the Under Secretary, stated that, beyond consolidating the different enactments connected with the Government of India, nothing would be done during the pendency of the war. Has the war come to an end now? If not, how are they justified in going back upon their word and introducing important changes? There is not one ground on which the changes now proposed to be introduced can be justified. So we hope that, in consideration of the opposition of the people here and elsewhere, including the non-official Europeans, the Secretary of State will withdraw this Bill immediately. If he does not do so, he cannot be said to have any knowledge of the public opinion in this country on this subject or to attach any weight to it.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, July 14th, 1916.

The Indian Consolidation Bill.

70. Referring to the Indian Consolidation Bill, the Yogakshemam, of the 14th July, observes that it will cause great disappointment to the people of India, who expected that some substantial good will be done to them after the conclusion of the war. It condemns the clause in the Bill, which takes away the right of the people to sue the Secretary of State and also the one which empowers the appointment of feudatory rulers as members of the Legislative Councils.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 18th, 1916.

The Manorama, of the 18th July, points out that this Bill, which strikes at the root of the privileges which the people have been enjoying from time immemorial, is the result of the decision of the Privy Council in the moment case, and that the whole weight of non-official opinion in India, both Indian and European, is not in its favour. In the opinion of this paper the introduction of such a Bill at this juncture shows that the Government are not in favour of the aspirations of the Indians; and it is not becoming on the part of "civilised Government to pass a law, without knowing beforehand the opinion of the people, whom it will affect. It, therefore, hopes that the Government will not pass such a law at this critical moment, and thereby curtail the time-honoured privileges enjoyed by the Indians."

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 11th, 1916.

"An Indian Bill in Parliament."

71. The Qaumi Report, of the 11th July, writes:—In these days the people seem to be bereft of their senses. God alone knows what these half-witted people are about. The fact is men of sound sense, in fact men of commanding intellect, are extraordinarily busy The minds of all, whether Europeans or Indians, are preoccupied with the same thought, viz, what will be the state of the world after the war and what changes will necessarily take place in the Colonies of the British Empire.

In this time of stress and storm the Parliament is anxious to pass an Indian Act!

No one sees the necessity for introducing such an unnecessary, unsuitable and complicated Bill with an active enemy in the field against and great anxiety is prevalent everywhere among the subjects of His Majesty the King-Emperor. Where is the necessity for voting on it when the Parliament can pass a better Act than this and when we can devote our attention towards something more profitable? The gist of this Act may be divided into three heads and none of them is such as can be objected to by a Christian, a Hindu or a Muhammadan of India. For instance the proposed Act requires that (1) in future no one should be empowered to sue the Secretary of State for India (without any specified conditions or restrictions); (2) any ruling chief or officer may be nominated for, and admitted to, the Legislative Council; (3) a member appointed to the Executive Council may be permitted to follow his trade or profession.

Obviously the first condition is contrary to constitutional law and political custom and practice, for the Secretary of State for India is responsible for Indian affairs and every citizen has a right to sue him in legal matters. This practice prevails even now. We cannot understand why a citizen should be deprived of his right of citizenship or his right to seek redress to which he is legally entitled. Law courts are governed by justice, law and Royal commands and if, for example a court requires the attendance of the Prime Minister or the King-Emperor, there is nothing wrong about it. Similarly the interference of Native States in Indian affairs is unnecessary, for an Indian Ruling Chief or any of his officers are just as ignorant of our political affairs as one of our rulers would be of theirs. It is a case of "Jesus has his religion and likewise Moses his." We have nothing in common with them, nor have their affairs any comparison with ours. We do not understand the wisdom of any such interference, or what Indian Princes are going to do or what lesson they are likely to learn on the councils.

The third question seems to be a very complicated one as every member of the Executive Council is paid by Government and, therefore, he is a Government servant. According to the Civil Service Regulations when a poor Government servant, who is in receipt of a small salary, is not permitted to engage in any trade even when he has a number of dependents upon him, how can the head of a firm or a merchant be allowed to derive benefit from his business and at the same time draw a Government salary especially when his Government colleagues cannot enjoy a similar privilege?

It is evident that in these respects the proposed Bill is open to very severe criticism.

But we are of opinion that this is no time for such discussions, besides the Government has already notified that permission will not be granted to introduce any contentious matters in the council. Parliament, however, pays no heed to this pronouncement and compels the country to open the door of disputation.

"Thou hast plunged me down in the depths of the sea.
"And then bidst me 'beware and keep my raiment dry'!"

From one end of the country to the other protest meetings against the Bill are being held. We hope that the intelligent members of Parliament will consider and understand and not make matters still more complicated.

IV.—Native States.

The Mysore budget.

72. Commenting on the Mysore budget for 1916-17, the Sampad Abhyuda, of the 15th July, observes:—The figures relating to the Cauvery power scheme, etc, show what huge sums our Government have spent on projects of a remunerative nature. The revenue expected during the year is nearly equal to the expenditure estimated. There will be no deficit nor will there be a surplus. This doubtless points to the ability with which our finances are handled. Many crores have been expended on the electrical works, the irrigation works, the educational measures, the economic projects, the University scheme, etc. Many more crores will be wanted still. All these projects are remunerative and they are among the best assets of Government. It will be admitted on all hands that this mode of spending the revenues so as to spread education among the masses and increase their happiness and well-being is far more laudable than the policy of accumulating a huge surplus in the treasury. If the need for the projects undertaken is conceded, the expenditure they entail ought not to be regarded as extravagance. In the huge machinery of the administration it is impossible to prevent waste altogether, but it must always be possible to prevent excessive lavishness. The care bestowed by our Government on the question of economy in the administration is indeed worthy of the highest commendation.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, July 15th, 1916.

The Mysore excise administration.

73. The Vrittanta Patrike, of the 20th July, writes:—We are pained to see that the Excise Commissioner in his annual report was constrained to remark that the people of Mysore seem determined not to give up the drink habit. It is most regrettable that, despite the gradual spread of education, and the knowledge which it must necessarily bring of the numerous evils arising from this nefarious habit, there is no earnest attempt on the part of the people to give it up entirely. If the amount they spend on liquor per year were to be distributed among the entire population of the province, each person would get Rs. 2! The decrease reported in the consumption of liquor may be true, but this seems to have led to a corresponding increase in the consumption of toddy. The decrease in the number of shops and the enhancement of the prices must no doubt help, to some extent, to check the growth of the evil and in order to eradicate it totally, the Government ought to exercise greater rigour in its excise administration. There are two matters which call for special criticism. The Malnad committee seems to have applied for special concessions for tapping the bastard sago tree for the benefit of the Malnad people; while at the same time the Excise Commissioner observes in his report, that in accordance with the wishes of Government the number of shops selling this class of toddy has been gradually decreased without causing any abrupt inconvenience to the consumers. It now appears that the Government are themselves inclined to grant the concession asked for. We hope the Government will remove the contradiction implied by these opposite views. Another serious matter is that the Government propose to encourage the people to cultivate ganja. It would be a great mistake to bring this drug within easier reach of the people. It is positively harmful to permit such cultivation and the best course would be to forbid it altogether, or, if that is considered not possible, it should at least be stipulated that the entire produce should be sold to druggists. Every well-wisher of the country is bound to feel sad on reading the Excise Commissioner's report. If the money, amounting to nearly a crore, which is now spent by the people on these harmful intoxicants were to be utilised for educational and industrial purposes, the progress of the province could have been effected by leaps and bounds. The schoolmasters should take great pains to explain the evils arising from the drink habit, and the Government too should arrange to distribute pamphlets on temperance at the public houses, in which case the people might one day exclaim: "If the drink habit is so very bad, why don't the Government close all the liquor shops?"

Vrittanta Patrike, Mysore, July 20th, 1916.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

1. The West Coast Spectator, of the 25th July, writes:—"Mrs. Besant bitterly complains that her steps are dogged by the mastiffs of the Criminal Investigation Department. She has no reason to complain when it is remembered that even such a statesman as Gokhale was honoured in his time by the attentions of the Criminal Investigation Department, and he had to make strong representations to Lord Minto on the matter. In his ever-memorable and famous 'political progress' from Calcutta to Lahore, the Criminal Investigation Department was after him. Why, we know that even a Judge of the High Court was once the subject of our police friends' attention. After all, are the Criminal Investigation Department to be blamed? They are maintained at considerable cost, they must earn their salary and have to submit weekly diaries of their work. What else are they to do then?"

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 25th, 1916.

The Criminal Investigation Department and Mrs. Besant.

2. The West Coast Spectator, of the 27th July, writes:—"The Walluvanad correspondent of a local vernacular paper says that tigers are roaming about certain amsoms committing great havoc among cattle. From cattle to human beings is but one step. It is, therefore, the clear duty of the authorities to organise a hunt and to show a little more liberality in the issue of gun licenses. Or, why not place a posse of Criminal Investigation Department men on special duty to shadow the movements of Mr. Stripes with a view to exterminate him and his tribe? This will be a real boon and much more profitable and useful than shadowing so-called political suspects and indulging in such other wild goose chase."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, July 27th, 1916.

The Criminal Investigation Department.

(b) Courts.

3. In a leader commenting on the case instituted against Mr. Tilak, New India, of the 25th July, says:—"A wave of anger will pass over India when the people hear that this great martyr of the motherland is again in the toils of his enemies. His going abroad to carry on his suit against Sir Valentine Chirol had been announced. Maharashtra was celebrating his birthday, and had given him a birthday present of a lakh of rupees. Lord Willingdon sends him a birthday gift of a demand for security bonds of Rs. 40,000 against sedition. What chivalry and good taste are shown in thus breaking into the birthday festivities.

New India, Madras, July 25th, 1916.

Bal Gangadhar Tilak.

"What is the object? To save Sir Valentine Chirol from being brought to account? Else, if the Bombay Government think him a preacher of sedition, why not rejoice to get rid of him out of the country? He could not preach sedition to India from England. . . . . What will be the next action of Government? One action which shocks the people comes after another. First it is New India security; then the order of exclusion against Mrs. Annie Besant; then the arrest of Mr. Shyam Sunder Chakravarti; then this attack on Mr. Tilak; and today some arrests of wealthy Marwari gentlemen. And all the time in Bengal, internments of smaller folk go on, every one of which means keen suffering inflicted on some helpless family. And all for what? Because the Government cannot govern well enough to make the people contented, but wants to prevent a whole nation from discussing its own affairs. Where is all this to end?"

(d) Education.

COMMONWEAL, Adyar, July 28th, 1916.

4. The Commonweal, for the week ending 28th July, writes:—

"The Outlook."

The Madras University.

"The extraordinary meeting of the Senate was rendered useless by the more extraordinary rulings of the Vice-Chancellor, who presumably was confused by the unruly heckling of the Europeans. The net upshot was that the resolutions on the agenda paper were not put to the vote but were brushed aside in the middle of the discussion by a new resolution, of which no notice was given, and which was not an amendment. We may look for another extraordinary meeting to complete the unfinished work, and a new application to the High Court for another mandamus. The slaughter of the innocents is bringing to the University its due meed of trouble. The adjourned meeting was a series of victories for the Indians, and that probably was the cause of the anger of the Europeans at the second meeting."

ANTISEPTIC, Madras, June 1916.

5. The Antiseptic, for June,* writes:—"It was only in December last that we had occasion to write on this subject. Since then it has been discussed in the Legislative Council, and now we have a circular issued by the Government of India to the Local Governments about medical instruction in the vernaculars.

Medical education in Madras.

"It seems that Bengalis want medical instruction in the vernaculars. Bengalis want many things. But what we cannot understand is why the Government of India, who ought to know the Bengalis very well, is asking the Madras Government whether they want for Madras what the Bengalis are asking for Bengal.

"We are told that at one time there was medical education in the vernaculars in Bengal. There was suttee in Bengal at one time and there are dacoities now. The origin of medical education in the vernaculars in Bengal was due to the fact that there was not enough of English-educated men coming forward to join the ranks of the Subordinate Medical Service. So it appears that vernacular medical education was started in 1839. We can quite understand that. In the year of grace 1916 we could not find our way from Howrah station to the Grand Hotel at Calcutta without exhausting our very poor supply of Hindustani. In 1839 a man who spoke nothing but English would have been taken in Calcutta for the 'wild man from Borneo.' . . . . It seems, in times gone by, the teaching of medicine in the vernacular was attempted in Madras. If we remember right the venue of this interesting experiment was Nellore. The method of teaching adopted was as follows:—A European Medical officer addressed in English a class of Madrassi students who were ignorant of that language and an Indian subordinate translated the lecture—sentence by sentence, as the English lecturer went on pausing after each sentence—into Telugu. This was the method generally used by European Missionaries addressing crowds on roadsides with an Indian catechist translating the European's theological discourse. How long this system of vernacular medical education flourished in Nellore we do not know. We have no official information on the subject, for, although we received the information from the Surgeon-General, we heard it narrated as a smoking room story, and not forwarded to us in an official communication.

"To come back to questions of practical politics. Do we require vernacular medical schools in the Madras Presidency? That question can best be answered by asking another question. Have we a sufficient number of English-educated young men coming forward to study medicine? The answer to this second question is found in the annual reports of the Royapuram Medical School. . . . . The demand for medical relief on western lines grows unceasingly, and it can be met only to a very small extent by the outturn of the Medical College. There is an increasing field for the employment of medical men with less advanced qualifications and for the training of such men the proper institutions are medical schools like the one at Royapuram. . . . . We shall confine our remarks for the present to the Royapuram Medical School. The usefulness of this school in the way of training a large number of private medical men who are free to settle down in the rural parts is impaired to a large extent by the meaningless policy of the Madras Government in reserving places in this school for students who are to be employed under Governments who are fully competent to have medical schools of their own. . . . . During the last three years we have turned away from the doors of the Royapuram Medical School over one thousand young men with S.S.L.C. certificates and who were anxious to study medicine and pay for their education. These men find it equally difficult to enter the Arts colleges to continue their studies for the Intermediate on account of the incomprehensible rules governing admission of students to the Intermediate class. Many of these young men, failing to get admission to any Educational institutions, simply drift and in course of time would constitute excellent material out of which anarchists are made. And yet when such material is going to waste people want vernacular medical education. . . . . About 30 per cent of the total strength of the school consists of Mysore and Burma pupils. Mysore has excellent hospitals and an efficient staff of medical men. If it can have a university, it certainly can have a medical school. The case of Burma is even worse. It has a medical school at Rangoon, but prefers to have a certain number of its students trained in Madras. . . . . Since the Royapuram Medical School is maintained by the Provincial revenues of the Madras Presidency the tax-payers of this presidency have a prior claim on the school than students from Mysore or Burma. To turn out hundreds of Madras Presidency tax-payers in order to accommodate Mysore and Burma students is too absurd a policy for any Government to follow. . . . . The institution is worked at a great loss And yet the Governments of Mysore and Burma do not contribute anything towards the upkeep of the Royapuram Medical School. And the private pupils are charged a fee of Rs. 25 a year. Has any one ever heard of professional education being given to private students for something over Rs. 2 a month? . . . . . The business methods of the Madras Government are simply wonderful. The major part of the money required to improve the medical schools will be readily available, if all qualified students seeking admission are admitted and charged a reasonable fee for their medical education. Perhaps that is too sordid a view for the Madras Government to take. With them it is all a matter of charity, but unfortunately their charity begins with Mysore and Burma."

6. In a leader under the heading, "The fight for the students", New India, of the 24th July, writes:—"The meeting of the Senate on Saturday was in many ways remarkable. First, the cleavage between the English and the Indian members was strongly marked, and the organisation of the latter told heavily on the results; secondly, the fate of the students was decided in a way so irregular that the decision ought not to be accepted; a new extraordinary meeting should at once be called to consider the resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Seshagiri Ayyar and the others, which were neither defeated by amendments nor voted upon as substantive motions; and, if possible, there should be an appeal to the High Court to set right the ruling of the Vice-Chancellor, which traversed the accepted rules of public business; otherwise a precedent is set which will make havoc of all debate, and will enable Chairmen to defeat resolutions at their own will, without submitting them to a vote. . . . . The three resolutions for which the extraordinary meeting was called were not discussed, and a new proposal, of which no notice appears to have been given, was passed. Surely, another meeting should be called to discuss the resolutions as printed. The Indians were naturally very angry, and the unhappy students outside were more angry. But the Indians should not allow themselves to be stultified in this way. The cause of the students is not yet lost. It is obvious that the action of the Vice-Chancellor was indefensible, and though he may have been tired and worried by the rude language of some of the English members—furious that the Indians should dare to oppose them—he ought to have adjourned the debate by every rule of public business. How will he make amends? And when will the resolutions be discussed?"

The Madras University and the Intermediate examination results.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

HINDU, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 24th July, says:—"Extraordinary indeed were the proceedings in and the result of the 'extraordinary meeting' of the Senate held on Saturday last. The meeting had been looked forward to with a good deal of interest by a large section of the public in view of the fact that its main purpose was to consider what steps could be taken to modify the disastrous results of the last Intermediate examination. This object was rendered impossible of accomplishment by the violent and obstructive tactics of several of the European Fellows, and by the incomprehensible final ruling of the bewildered Vice-Chancellor. . . . . Then again we find that the language used by some of the European Fellows during their heated denunciation of the agitation on behalf of the vast mass of the slaughtered students, passed beyond the bounds of decency. . . . . Such insulting, improper and offensive remarks ought not to have been indulged in by one who is a missionary and claims the benefit of having received a high English education, and we think the Vice-Chancellor should have, as he was asked to do, called the irate missionary to order, for making them. . . . . We think the government of the University ought, under the present circumstances, to pass from ignorant and bumptious European management into the hands of those who can correctly appreciate local conditions, and approximate their actions with practicable ideals. The extraordinary meeting of Saturday ended, however, in a fiasco so far as the immediate object of it was concerned; and it has caused profound disappointment among the public."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

The Indian Patriot, of the 24th July, remarks:—"The extraordinary meeting of the Madras University, to which a number of young men had been looking forward with hope, has ended in adding insult to injury. The Syndicate and the Board of Examiners have said, in effect, that the students and their teachers are both worthless. There is to be no immediate relief, the whole question being referred to a committee who are to investigate and write reports. . . . . But the public will not be satisfied with the committee. The spirit of those in power has burst out, and we know now with whom we have to contend. The university can do no wrong. The examiners are lenient, very indulgent indeed, and are simply overflowing with the milk of human tenderness. The question papers are all easy, and the mistake is with the Indian boys. Some portion of the responsibility is shared also by the Principals of Colleges who have been indiscriminately admitting useless material for a university course."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 25th, 1916.

The Indian Patriot, of the 25th July, observes:—"The meeting of the Senate that was held on Saturday was really extraordinary. It was extraordinary in that it was intended to pass a resolution for increasing the number of successful candidates at the Intermediate examination. It was extraordinary that this object was ignored and a committee was appointed to enquire into the causes of the failure and to recommend measures to obtain more satisfactory results. . . . . There was no notice of the resolution which Mr. Moffat was permitted to move and was carried. It was sprung upon the meeting suddenly, while Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's resolution had been notified beforehand. . . . . The proposition was specific and definite. It was the principal business before the meeting. But Mr. Moffat came through a side-door, and carried the day. The irregularity is self-evident. The Vice-Chancellor not only allowed an independent resolution, of which no notice had been given, to be discussed and passed, while the resolution to consider which the meeting had been specially called, was set aside and finally ignored. . . . . In our opinion, nothing will improve matters except a radical change in the spirit that rules the university. And the spirit, we fear, cannot change unless the men change. So long as the present men dominate the University, education in Madras will not make much progress though certain colleges may appear better than others."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 26th, 1916.

New India, of the 26th July, states:—"We have a number of letters attacking the Rev. Messrs. Macphail and Pittendrigh. They all express the bitter resentment felt by the students against the language used regarding them. Their anger is certainly justifiable, but we do not think that much good would come of printing so many letters. Every gentleman already condemns the language used, but strong language against the offenders may turn sympathy the other way. The important thing is to have another meeting of the Senate to discuss the ignored resolutions."

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, July 26th, 1916.

The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 26th July, writes:—"It would have been extraordinary, indeed, if the Senate of the Madras University had at their extraordinary meeting agreed to have the pass list of the Intermediate examination revised. Raising the percentage of the passes by a fiat of the Senate will not help to remove the root causes of the debacle of the Intermediate. They are too deep for any such surface cure. There is no use blaming the examiners. As per the regulations of the University they have to go by a certain standard in marking the answer papers of the candidates, and those who fall short of the standard have to be 'ploughed' necessarily. . . . . In proposing to increase the percentage of passes or in appointing a committee to inquire into the causes of the woeful slaughter in the Intermediate examination, the Senate are only beating about the bush. The causes of it should be looked for elsewhere. The School Final is at the bottom of the whole mischief. It must go first before any sane scheme of examinations can be evolved by the Madras University."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 27th, 1916.

Referring to the proceedings of the recent extraordinary meeting of the Senate of the Madras University, the West Coast Spectator, of the 27th July, observes:—"Though the feeling was strong, a clever tactic—and it is nothing less than that—smothered the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Seshagiri Ayyar's resolution. Mr. Moffat moved, in the midst of confused talk and a sort of uproar we are told, that a committee be appointed to enquire and report upon the causes of failure at the last Intermediate examination and recommend, if necessary, any measure that might be adopted to ensure more satisfactory results. He was careful enough to explain further that the measures he wanted the committee to suggest was for future examinations. Then occurred a most amazing incident. The learned Vice-Chancellor ruled Mr. Moffat's motion in order and declared that the motion before the House was his motion, and directed voting which was done resulting in forty-three voting for and thirteen against. The other resolutions, including Mr. Justice Seshagiri Ayyar's, were thus stifled, without even being put to the vote. It is not surprising that several Fellows expressed wonder, and the man in the street who knows only to look at things from a commonsense point of view, shares this wonder, and must characterise the Vice-Chancellor's ruling as startling. . . . . The incident, and the trend of the discussion have thrown into bold relief the disadvantages of having an officialised university packed with European officials and non-officials who cannot generally see eye to eye with their Indian colleagues The University should be representative, in every sense of the word, of Indian interests which pay the piper, and constituted in such a manner as to be able to realise the people's feelings and to respect their opinions. A University which 'slaughters' its examinees, taking shelter under specious arguments ought to be, as Dr. Nayar very correctly put it, done away with, and the earlier the better."

7. The Allahabad Matriculation results.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 26th, 1916.

In commenting on the large percentage of failures in the Allahabad University Matriculation examination, New India, of the 26th July, says:—"What is to be the fate of the young men? Driven from the only chance of earning their livelihood—for the degree offers the only gateway to advancement in life—with no prospects before them of an industrial or commercial career, it is inevitable that their hearts and minds should be filled with thoughts of bitterness and despair. Is this a safe policy to pursue? We cannot help thinking that there is a general bankruptcy of statesmanship in the powers that rule India. To drive young men to despair, to cut off all hopes of an honourable career, is to sow the seeds of a revolution. The political dangers of such a policy are but too evident. Will not the Governments have some mercy on these thousands of young lives placed in their hands?"

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 27th, 1916.

Students' troubles.

8. In a leader under the heading "Young India", New India, of the 27th July, writes:—"The new life stirring in the students of India shows itself in two main ways: one, the intense desire to be of use to the country, to serve the poor and the helpless; the other, the feeling of self-respect, of pride of race and country, which make them resent insult and rebel against injustice and brutal treatment. Both these tendencies are good, but the second inevitably leads to difficulties that need to be disentangled by sympathy and patience. . . . . But this vitality in service is inevitably accompanied by the sense of self-respect. And this shows itself in self-assertion, as against brutality of speech or action, directed against them. The 'meek Hindu,' who was always largely a creature of the Anglo-Indian imagination, is showing his old martial qualities and his intolerance of insult. Thus the students of the Presidency College, Calcutta, resented their Professor's rude language, the students of the Wesley College, Madras, resented being beaten; the students of the Raja of Pithapur's College, Cocanada, resented being spied upon; the students of the Christian College, Madras, resent the language used by their Professors, Messrs Pittendrigh and Macphail, in the Senate meeting. . . . . The only way of meeting the high spirit of the present generation of Indian youth is to treat boys and young men as they are treated in England. The attempt to crush them by severe punishments is futile, and can only lead to serious mischief. In England, college students riot, one or two are 'sent down', the rest are reprimanded, and the matter is done with. Full allowance is made for high spirits; the master or professor who insults his students is never found. Discipline is preserved, but no attempt is made to crush the lads' spirits nor to treat them as contemptible The odious idea of race inferiority colours the whole atmosphere of Indian and Anglo-Indian relationships and until this is destroyed we shall have no peace."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 27th, 1916.

English and the Indian student.

9. In an article on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 27th July, says:—"We are concerned that the Madras University should define education as the possession of a faultless knowledge of the English language. Because four thousand boys have gone up for the examination, instead of, as before the introduction of the School Final, one thousand, therefore they must be rickshawallahs and jutkawallahs! Absence of an accurate knowledge of the English language should not prevent the Indian youth from studying science or mathematics. And yet this is being done. No one has yet come forward to insist that this heartless devastation of a growing nation shall cease, that a Hunter-Macphail standard of English is not the key to success in life, that education means something other than a knowledge of the English language. The Japanese and the Germans are educated people, but they do not know English language enough to satisfy the Madras University standard. . . . . The startling opinion is given that a majority of the students are unfit for a university course. And why! 'Because they are unable to write the simplest English correctly, and do not give any evidence of having read their books with discrimination.'"

Madras Corporation street obstructions.

10. The following appears in the Indian Patriot of the 27th July:—"We wonder whether the Madras Corporation has power to shut out the houseowner from his house; but in streets where the underground drainage work is apace, this scandal is continued. The Corporation does not admit any responsibility to provide walking space on either side of the dug-out. The mud is thrown out indiscriminately, and the rains rapidly turn them into mire which draws in the unwary foot knee-deep. Numerous instances have occurred where men and women have measured their length on the little hillocks, helplessly struggling on to their doorsteps in a pitiable condition. It is impossible to walk along; and unless the pedestians are prepared to jump, they must have outside support. The rains impart an element of danger to the very life of pedestrians. Women have been observed to weep, out of sheer helplessness, surrounded on all sides by slippery hillocks. It is a pity that such a scandal should be permitted. . . . . In no civilised country would such a scandal be tolerated. But Madras is benighted; the spirit of fatality is in us all, and we take things as inevitable. Of course, we have Commissioners who are to take care of the interests of the rate-payers, but they are helpless before the meanest limb of the executive. The law court is the only remedy; but it means a public-spirited and a wealthy man who can pay the lawyers and the expenses of the court. It is high time that the Madras Corporation was taught that it owes certain responsibilities to the rate-payers."

11. The West Coast Spectator, of the 27th July, remarks:—"Five members of the Palghat Municipal Council are said to have declined to stand for re-election 'as a protest against the way in which the administration is being run by the executive;' and now another vakil councillor has resigned on the same ground. All these gentlemen are Brahmans. We must at once characterise their action as unwise and petulant. We call this not civic patriotism, but 'civic cowardice', the result, perhaps, of the absence of moral courage, for, how can these protests have any effect on the administration?

The Palghat Municipal Council.

WEST COAST SPECTATOR Calicut, July 27th, 1916.

"If the administration is so bad, it was the clear duty of the Councillors to have remained and attempted to purify it. Six Councillors if they combine together can make much and unmake much, giving the executive a very bad time of it by means of interpellations, resolutions and minutes of dissent. In fact, once upon a time the administration of our own Municipality was far from good. Six Councillors combined together and worked in concord with the result that their constant vigilance kept the executive within bounds and neutralised some of the evils. For this reason we have to strongly condemn the procedure of the Palghat Councillors."

12. The following appears in New India, of the 28th July:—"The proposal of having an Indian Civil Servant as Municipal Commissioner for Karachi having been abandoned, one post more, which had been got ready for the heaven-born service, was about to be lost, and so it seems an Indian Civil Servant has been appointed to be a Municipal Commissioner, not for Karachi—where public opinion is too strong—but for poor Hyderabad, Sindh. The Municipality of Hyderabad had been already suspended and a managing committee was appointed in its stead by the Bombay Government, despite the most vigorous remonstrance. So now the public, having no voice in the management of Municipal affairs, an Indian Civil Servant must manage them, thus encouraging local self-government. The conditions of the enrolment in the service are such as to preclude an Indian from getting into it as easily as an Englishman, and hence it is necessary to enter a protest when more and more posts are thus created for that service, while such poor self-government as we have is diminished."

(h) Railways.

13. The West Coast Spectator, of the 25th July, states:—"Complaints about the indignities and ill-treatments railway passengers, of the third class of course, are subjected to are ever on the increase. The other day No. 11 mail was very much over-crowded, and in spite of this some very kind railway underlings had reserved one full compartment for a couple of Eurasians! Indian passengers who dared approach the sacred compartment were met with a volley of abuses. Now, reservation of compartments in this manner, is clearly illegal, but still then, they do not see its illegality. During the tenure of Mr. Cockcraft there were very little complaints, and it is to be regretted that since his transfer we should every now and then have to write about the vagaries of the railway understrappers."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 27th, 1916.

New India, of the 27th July, observes:—"From information that is constantly reaching us, it is abundantly clear that the educated community has made up its mind not to tolerate any longer the illegal scandal of having railway compartments 'reserved for Eurepeans and Eurasians'. We stated, some time ago, that leaflets as to the illegality of the Railway action were being distributed broadcast and in hundreds; and in keeping with the new spirit in evidence everywhere to-day in India, a large number of railway passengers are anxious that the Railway Companies shall be brought to a sense of fairness. Naturally they have been entering the 'reserved' compartments, and the favoured occupants of the same—acting in conformity with their traditions—have been resenting the demand of the Indians, with the result that altercations have often passed from words to blows. The situation is growing daily keener—so keen that the powers that be who are responsible for the maintenance of peace and order should at once step in.

"What is most shocking in these developments is the attitude of the South Indian Railway in persisting in their illegal action. The officers of the company must long have known that their action in reserving compartments for any race has been declared illegal, and recent events must have brought to their notice the harm caused by the daily altercations between the Indians and the favoured few. And yet they are insisting on their illegal action. Evidently, in the opinion of its officers, it does not matter if racial strife be accentuated in the country, or if public peace be disturbed. Their only determination is to persist in the illegality."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 28th, 1916.

In a further article on this subject, New India, of the 28th July, says:—"The persistence of the South Indian Railway in continuing to label compartments with the notices 'Reserved for Europeans and Eurasians' deserved to be carefully thought over by the people of India. The incident sums up one aspect of the political situation in this country, showing the position of Indians when the issue at stake concerns Europeans outside the limits of India. The South Indian Railway is managed, no doubt, by a private company, which, speaking broadly, can demand greater freedom of action than a Government department; but it should not be forgotten that the managing company is only a lessee, and that the line is owned by the people of India. . . . . It is this semi-official position of the railways that adds to the surprising character of the attitude it has taken up concerning the reservation of compartments for Eurasians. We understand that, as if to add insult to injury, they have put up new notices, instead of worn ones, on the compartments concerned. What does that show? Evidently the authorities take pride in persisting in an illegal action, which has become all the more reprehensible by reason of the natural and praiseworthy desire of some Indians to do away with it. Not only is it illegal; but it is insulting to the self-respect of the people of India. No self-respecting Indian can reconcile himself to the demand that the railway company, owned by him and his countrymen, should be allowed to perpetuate racial differences intended for his humiliation.

"The defence of the legal rights of Indians should, however, be left to men, and not taken up by students. How often has Mrs. Besant urged on students that they should not enter the political field of activity, but should confine themselves to the study of public questions. We know how keen is their interests, but their time for action has not come. They are recruits, only half-drilled; they are not ready to go to the front. As Mr. Bradlaugh often pointed out, no violence is desirable in the assertion of a legal right. A man legally sitting in a railway carriage, and ordered to get out, has only to refuse; the moment a hand is laid on him he should yield, and prosecute the official for assault. But this, we repeat, is man's work, not boys'.

"The inciter to disturbance is the South Indian Railway which persists in keeping up illegal notices. The Madras Mail says that 'the Railway authorities. . . . . took all possible precautions to avert trouble'. The only precaution necessary was to obey the law by removing the illegal notices, and this one simple precaution they did not choose to take.

"We would repeat our appeal to the Government of India and to the Railway Board to end the scandal at once. It is not becoming a semi-official agency like a railway company to act in the fashion in which it is doing—specially in view of the price which the country and the Government has to pay for its folly. There is not the least shred of justification for the action of the South Indian Railway in this matter. Its whim is illegal and is dangerous to the public peace. Is it too much to request the Railway Board that its servants shall at least be told to obey the law?"

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 29th, 1916.

New India, of the 29th July, writes:—"The comments of the Anglo-Indian journals on the incident that took place at the Fort Station of the South Indian Railway on Thursday are specially noteworthy. They are anxious to apportion the blame to all agencies except the real offender, and in their opinion, the guilty people are not those who committed and persist in committing an illegal action, but those who pointed out the illegality, or who are not willing to tolerate the illegality, when circumstances force that course of action upon them. . . . . Still one does not find words strong enough to characterise the action of these journals that abuse the Indians, young or old, that seek to put down the illegal policy of the railways. The notice, 'Reserved for Europeans and Eurasians,' is not only illegal and insulting, but is even more intolerable. When the trains are crowded to the utmost, and even the second-class compartments are full to the brim, the Indian passengers find one or two carriages more or less empty, and they are told that they should remain so empty for the benefit—prospective or otherwise—of a chance batch of favoured passengers. And to add to the humiliation, such reservation is known now to be illegal. And yet those apologists come forward to abuse the Indian passengers for trying to enter these compartments. . . . . Instead of advising the Railway Company to remove the illegal source of evil, these apologists cry themselves hoarse over the actions of those who either point out the illegality of the mischievous policy, or who, in one constitutional way or other, try to end it. Has it become so heinous, in the opinion of these wise critics, that people should occasionally range themselves on the side of law and justice? Or do they foam with fury because the demand for justice concerns the Railway Company which they are anxious to shield?"

(k) General.

14. The West Coast Spectator, of the 22nd July, remarks:—"As we said the other day, the Home Rule movement has come to stay in the land and no mistake. There are certainly differences of opinion—and public life cannot be healthy unless there are differences of opinion—on the Home Rule question. But these differences relate to details and to time. Very many, including our humble selves, hold that the present is not very opportune for the discussion of controversial topics and to press for administrative reforms when Great Britain is engaged in a life and death struggle with the powers of darkness and that the time has not yet come for the reception of autonomy."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 22nd, 1916.

The Home Rule movement.

15. In a leader under the heading "A possible hindrance to Indian Advancement", the Indian Patriot, of the 28th July, says:—"The Home Rule League for India,' organised in England, has met with suspicion and opposition. The Times has given the lead and called upon the Government not to neglect the movement as insignificant. This must have sufficiently alarmed people who are anxious about India. . . . . The Home Rule for India League, guided and led by Mrs. Besant, will never lack energy; but we do not equally count upon the wisdom which may inspire

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 28th, 1916.

"The Home Rule League for India."

it. All great national achievements have been the result of the labours of men ripe in wisdom, in knowledge of the world and of steady adherence to order and legality. We do not suggest that the Home Rule League for India will be conducted by those who are not alive to the importance of these virtues; but it will lack the steadiness and strength and the sense of responsibility which an organisation like the Congress is naturally credited with. . . . . The tendency of the League, whatever may be its aim, is not to show the same restraint and the same regard for the difficulties of the Government as Sir S. P. Sinha's language implies. And it is no matter for surprise that the League has been distrusted at its very start and condemned by the Times. Is it expedient at this time of war to rouse the suspicion, the anger and the opposition of the more powerful politicians and political parties in England? . . . . We should decide whether we should commit an agitation, which is pregnant with such consequences, into the hands of Mrs. Besant and her Home Rule organisation or we should not take it into our own hands so as to free it from the suspicion of the authorities. . . . . An agitation independent of the Congress has not the least chance of carrying any weight with the British public, but it is sure to create a prejudice against the cause in which India is deeply interested. The self-government ideal, if preached under the auspices of the Congress, will not surely be suppressed; but preached by the Home Rule for India League, the authorities may not feel much hesitation in prohibiting its discussion. . . . . The problem seems to be fast assuming a new and dangerous complexion, and can we not take steps to escape the consequences by timely precautions. Let us remember that if we allow the advance of political ideas to be arrested, we shall have to work again for another generation to revive what is destroyed in the name of momentous necessity."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

Aliens and British subjects.

16. New India, of the 24th July, states:—"Why does the Governor in Council of Bombay prefer enemy aliens in his Presidency to British subjects? Mrs. Besant is warned off the sacred soil, but two German ladies are allowed to join their husbands. We are glad the poor wives are to be made happy, but why give to them a privilege denied to the lawabiding British subject."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, July 25th, 1916.

Income-tax assessors.

17. The Indian Patriot, of the 25th July, writes:—"We regret to find that the authorities do not seem to have yet realised the absolutely unjustifiable and defiantly lawless manner in which the income-tax subordinates are working. We showed some days ago how, in the face of very definite rules, the Income-tax Inspector goes straight to assessees and calls for accounts. Subordinate assessing officers are not permitted by the rules to do so; the Income-tax Inspector is not even a subordinate assessing officer, and we are surprised that, in spite of specific complaint made, such lawlessness should be continued. . . . . This is a scandal which must cease. We have never heard of such complaints hitherto. The public would like to have a clear pronouncement upon the subject, whether it is the intention of the authorities that the Income-tax Inspector should call for accounts and give benevolent advice."

HINDU, Madras, July 25th, 1916.

India and the Imperial Conference.

18. The Hindu, of the 25th July, writes:—"The important announcement that was made, according to Reuter, by Mr. Asquith that an Imperial Conference will be held as early as possible to consider commercial policy to be adopted after the war and that representatives from India will be included in the Conference will be welcomed throughout India. . . . . Mr. Asquith's mention of India's participation is, we think, satisfactory enough and we trust that, on the same basis, India will be allowed to take part in the Imperial Conference to be held after the war to consider the future Government of the Empire. . . . . This takes us to the question of the choice of representatives. Ever since the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi's resolution on the participation of India in the Imperial Conference was accepted by the Government, Indian public opinion has declared itself unmistakably that the scheme will be deprived of its charm and utility, if only officials of the Government in India are allowed to represent India. That representation will be a sham and a delusion. Representation should be adequate—quite as much as is allowed to the Dominions—and true. Considering that subjects of the first-rate importance are to come up, the necessity for sending to the Conference Indians, chosen by the people and having their confidence, cannot be exaggerated."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 25th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 25th July, says:—"Mr. Asquith's reply to a series of questions in the House of Commons discloses the fact that a committee has been appointed in England to discuss the fiscal question with the various English parties, in order to come to an understanding before the Imperial Conference meets to discuss the industrial and commercial policy of the Empire. Mr. Asquith says that there will be representation of India on the Conference. For this many thanks. But now arises a serious question. Who are to be the representatives of India? Are they to be the Anglo-Indians, representatives of trading concerns, who do not feel with us, whose interests clash with the interests of the country wherein they trade? . . . . There are the mill-owners of the Western Presidency; there are the various Indian and European Chambers of Commerce; there are manufacturers and producers; there are the great trading concerns, like the Tata Iron and Steel Company; all these people would like to have a voice in the choice of India's representatives, whose number we do not know. . . . . There are also Banks, Chambers of Commerce, trading centres, manufacturers and industrialists; what voice should they have in the selection of a representative or representatives?"

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 28th, 1916.

New India, of the 28th July, has the following:—"Replying to Lord Templeton, as to why no representatives of the Dominions were taken on the committee to consider the conclusions arrived at at the Paris Conference, Lord Crewe told the Lords that the present committee was merely a preliminary one and said: 'An opportunity would be given for the representation of the Colonies in all questions affecting the Empire.' Indians would naturally want to know whether 'representation of self-governing Colonies' can be stretched to include representation of India. Because immediately Anglo-India would say: 'India is not a Colony: it is not self-governing: therefore India will have no representation.' Quod erat demonstrandum.

"No further arguments, we believe, are necessary to show that India must, definitely, in the terms of the Hon'ble Mr. Lyon, 'formulate her demands now.' If we sit quiet, we shall be swamped. The tide of progress will sweep us on to deposit us on the rubbish heap of nations. Our attitude must be firm. We must settle what we have to ask and stick to it steadfastly. 'Follow Lala Lajpat Rai's advice' must be our motto.

"But is it wise, we ask, on the part of the authorities, to ignore India so continuously? Messrs. Churchill and Lloyd George want to use the man-power of the Empire, while the latter is prepared to follow France's example. Does this mean that there will be granted to Indians the right to bear arms, and volunteer their services for their King? If so, will Lord Crewe note that it would be graceful and politic to remember the presence of India within the Empire, and to allot to her an honourable place in its Councils? Real statesmanship would not hesitate a second in doing such an act of bare justice. Do the British leaders of today lack statesmanship, that they do not recognise these facts in time?"

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 25th, 1916.

19. New India, of the 25th July, states:—"Elsewhere we print an extract from the Times of India which may well be dedicated to Messrs. Webb & Co. of Karachi. Much has been written in condemnation in Tory organs in England and their counterparts in this country as to the inadequate share of India towards the prosecution of the war. More than once we have drawn attention to the fact that Britishers in this country are not doing their bit properly. All the money that it is possible for this poor country to give has been given. Our few Princes and our many peoples have contributed their financial help in a manner which makes us proud. If not a single more rupee is given, our record would be a fine one. The Princes who are allowed to fight have gone to the battlefields, faithful to their ancient traditions. Our Indian army, maintained from Indian taxation, has been doing yeoman service and saved the situation in the very first weeks of the war. The Government does not allow Indians to volunteer, and so practically nothing remains for Indians to do. But what are the Britishers in this country doing? One answer we find in the extract from our Bombay contemporary: The clubs and messes are consuming costly liquors and young men of fighting age are everywhere in evidence. While the English Government is clamouring for men, and more men, why are these men of fighting age allowed to be slack and lead easy luxurious lives in our big cities? Much of their routine work could be enqually efficiently done by Indians, who already do the hard work to which these Sahib-logs only put their seal of approval and consent."

For Anglo-Indians.

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 25th, 1916.

A noble speech.

20. New India, of the 25th July, has the following:—"Speaking at the anniversary of Kristo Das Pal, the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Lyon gave expression to sentiments of an unexceptional character. What is most noteworthy is his reference to the work which Indians should be doing at the present moment: that of formulating their national demands. He says that Kristo Das Pal would 'have known how to utilise this period of waiting before the war ends in the formulation of the claims and aspirations of his countrymen'. This is exactly what we are doing, and what Lord Willingdon objects to. We are glad to find that the Civil Service has at least one officer who can give utterance to such an out-and-out Indian opinion. He also observed that India would cease to be a dependent at the end of the war. She would be a partner in the Empire. How happy would be the situation in India, if the Imperial Government should have the courage and the statesmanship to make an identical statement. All trouble and unrest would cease, and glad co-operation would take the place of suspicion and distrust. All India should be grateful to Mr. Lyon, and should realise that in him the true England is speaking, the England of Milton and Sidney, not that of the Anglo-Indian bureaucracy. His words come as the cry of a friend across the darkness, and we shall continue to follow his good advice, which embodies our policy."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 25th, 1916.

India and the Gallipoli and Mesopotamian Commission.

21. The West Coast Spectator, of the 25th July, observes:—"A joint private enquiry into the Mesopotamia and Gallipoli muddles will be held by both the Houses of Parliament. Mr. Asquith has been gracious enough to announce that Australian representations will sit at the enquiry. What about India? Indian soldiers did shed their life blood in both the zones, side by side with the Australian troops, and the Government of India are as much interested in the enquiry as anybody. They have been quietly ignored! This is significant, and we shall not in the least be surprised if our countrymen regard the oft-repeated phrase, 'the angle of vision,' as but a clap-trap, without any meaning or reality."

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, July 26th, 1916.

The Madras Presidency and the Defence of India Act.

22. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 26th July, remarks:—"We hope there is no foundation for the rumour that Madras is going to be declared a province under the Defence of India Act. It is impossible to conceive that there are elements in this quiet province which are likely to disturb public safety and Lord Pentland's Government know how peace-loving the people of Madras have always been and how little inclined they are to embarrass Government at the present time. There may be one or two who insist upon making themselves notorious, but for their sake to visit this province with such a punishment is obviously unjust. The credit of the non-application of the Act to this province belongs to Lord Pentland and his colleagues who are no less sympathetic than his Lordship, and it is not to be detracted from even by the Home Rule agitation of Mrs. Besant. If the truth is to be told, nobody outside certain printing offices is agitated about Home Rule, and if the Madras Government obtain the sanction of the Government of India to extend the Defence of India Act to this province, they will lay themselves open to the charge of taking the Home Rule propaganda as seriously as the printing offices we have referred to."

HINDU, Madras, July 27th, 1916.

The impressment of carts for Government officials.

23. The Hindu, of the 27th July, states:—"At a meeting of the Madras Legislative Council held on 6th April 1916 a resolution was moved in regard to the impressment of carts for Government officials. . . . . The Government have now requested the Board of Revenue to impress on all Collectors the desirability of fixing adequate rates for cart-hire. We can hardly understand why the Government should content themselves with this pious wish. The complaints made in the Legislative Council were with reference to the inadequate rates for cart-hire fixed by Collectors. The proper remedy is not to set up, as it were, the accused as judge, as is now done by the Government, but to call for reports as to existing rates and suggestions for enhanced rates and then issue instructions to the officers concerned after a calm consideration of the whole matter. It will be much better for the administration if the Government would revise their notions about the infallibility of the Collectors."

Indian Moslems and the Arab revolt.

24. The following appears in New India, of the 27th July, under the heading "False News":—"The Daily Mail, London, prints the following:

INDIAN MOSLEMS AND MECCA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

CALCUTTA, Friday.

Muhammadans here are greatly elated at the action of the Grand Sharif of Mecca in freeing the Hedjaz from Turkish rule. They now feel that, with British help, the safety of their sacred cities is assured.

It is also felt that the act will powerfully influence the Turks to free themselves from German influence.

The Daily Telegraph prints:

ARABIAN REVOLT.

SATISFACTION IN INDIA.

BOMBAY, Sunday.

Muhammadans here welcome the news proclaiming the Arab independence. The power of the Young Turks made the pilgrimage of the Hadjis (pilgrims) to Mecca extremely hazardous, but now that the Arab Chief has turned out the Turks, the Muhammedans hope, with the assistance of Great Britain, that a safer pilgrimage will be assured.—Exchange Telegraph Company.

"To send out such falsifications of facts is treasonable, as it entirely misleads Great Britain. Everyone here knows how false these statements are. Great Britain must not be blamed if she is misled by false reports, permitted by the Censor to pass, while he suppresses true reports. . . . . We see that India repeats this news and believes it. The paper is so much out of touch with Indian feeling now that its belief, perhaps, is natural; the blame lies on those who circulate such falsehoods. But it ought to be remembered, as a matter of commonsense, that India circulates over here, and that Musalmans will be infuriated at this misrepresentation of their real sentiments. Most Indians do not read the Daily Mail and the Daily Telegraph, but India has a circulation over here among educated Hindus and Musalmans. Hence it is deplorable when it is misled—by false news sent from this country—to irritate still further the sorely tried Musalman community."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 28th, 1916.

The Government of Bombay and Mrs. Annie Besant.

25. New India, of the 28th July, writes:—"'The mountain laboured and brought forth a mouse.' The Government of Bombay, after twelve days of travail, has brought forth an acknowledgment. Here it is:—

No. 4961 of 191 (sic).

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT,
Bombay Castle, 26th July 1916.

From

L. ROBERTSON, Esq.,
Secretary to the Government of Bombay,

To

Mrs. ANNIE BESANT,
Adyar, Madras, S.

MADAM,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 12th July 1916, on the subject of the order served on you under Rule 3 of the Defence of India Consolidation Rules, 1915, and in reply, to inform you that the Government of Bombay are unable to enter into a discussion on the points raised in your letter.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,
Your most obedient servant,

L. ROBERTSON,
Secretary to Government.

"All efforts to obtain a copy of the Rules issued under the Offence Act have so far failed. So we do not enjoy even the light they might shed on the mystery. How joyous a thing it is to live under a form of Government that uses a war measure to restrict the liberty of a harmless citizen, and 'are unable to enter into a discussion on the points raised'. The Government speak the truth when they say 'unable,' and we congratulate them on their frankness. We felt pretty sure that they were unable to give any grounds for their order, and we are pleased to find out that we were right. My letter reached Bombay on July 14th. The Government took twelve days to find an answer, and finally confess their inability to discuss. 'Condemn unheard' is the only way in which the Government of Bombay can shut out of its domain a loyal subject of the Crown. The omission of the 6, and the leaving of the year as 191 is of course accidental, but it is significant. The sub-conscious mind of the Government of Bombay realise that the year 191 is more appropriate as the date of its order than the year 1916."

HINDU, Madras, July 28th, 1916.

The Madras Legislative Council.

26. The Hindu, of the 28th July, observes:—"The Madras Government are content to do things in a leisurely manner. . . . . By post today we have received from the Government Secretariat, Ootacamund, passes for our representatives to attend the Council meeting to be held on the 3rd August. But we do not yet know who are the members of the Legislative Council, excepting those who are ordinary or ex-officio members, viz., the Governor, the Members of the Executive Council, and the Advocate-General. The elections to fill up the seats in the Council, twenty-one in number, have all taken place, and the result of the last of them was made known on the 19th instant. It seems inexplicable why the results of the elections have not yet been announced in the Fort St. George Gazette nor the nominations to non-official as well as the official seats. . . . . There is no reasonable ground for withholding publication of the results of the election at the earliest opportunity, and for refraining to make the nominations till the eleventh hour. The Governor according to the Regulations has the power of making nomination, and it would have been wise and statesmanlike if Lord Pentland had arranged to come down to Madras from Ootacamund and gauged popular opinion before exercising his judgment in the matter, aided no doubt by the advice of his official colleagues. As the matter now stands, Lord Pentland who is timed to leave Ootacamund today at 4 p.m. would probably have performed the act of making nominations just before leaving the place. It is much to be regretted that His Excellency did not think it right and fair to take the people on the plains into his confidence by coming down to Madras a few days earlier in order to make nominations of non-official representatives of such a character as would work efficiently with the elected representatives. . . . . If the results of the elections had been published in the last Fort St. George Gazette, any of the newly elected Members could have exercised their right to give notice of their intentions to make any motions and it is no longer available to them for this meeting. For their having been deprived of this right the Government owe them and the public an intelligible explanation. One of the Regulations relating to the course of business at the meetings of the Legislative Council says that, at least three clear days before the date fixed for a meeting, the Secretary shall send to the Madras address of every member a printed statement of the business to be transacted at such meeting. . . . . If the high officials of the Government were living with the people on the plains instead of, for seven months in the year, at a hill station, and if they cherished and acted under the belief, that the non-official representatives were aids to and not clogs upon good Government, we should not have the present unsatisfactory state of things."

HINDU, Madras, July 29th, 1916.

The Hindu, of the 29th July, writes:—"We find that our expectation which we expressed yesterday that the names of the Members of the Legislative Council, Official and Non-official, will be published in a Fort St. George Gazette Extraordinary before this evening is not to be realised. . . . . An Ootacamund message says that a Fort St. George Gazette Extraordinay will be issued on the 1st August announcing the nominations to the Legislative Council. This would leave a day's interval before the meeting of the Council which is to take place on the 3rd August. As we pointed out yesterday, it is laid down in No. 7 of the Rules of Business that 'at least three clear days before the date fixed for a meeting, the Secretary shall send to the Madras address of every Member a printed statement of the business to be transacted at such Meeting.' This rule cannot be complied with in its terms if the Fort St. George Gazette Extraordinary is to be issued only on the 1st August. . . . . It is extraordinary, that in a matter of this sort there should be so much unexplained delay, so much mystery, such scant regard for popular opinion as well as for the convenience and requirements of the non-official members of the Council. . . . . It seems to us unfair in the highest degree both to the candidates who stand for election and to the non-official members of the Council whose votes they seek, that there should be not more than one day's interval to enable the latter to form their judgment on such an important matter. And what may the reason be for this slothful way of doing business? The Legislative department must have been sleeping at its post of duty to furnish this riddle for solution by the public."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 29th, 1916.

27. New India, of the 29th July, has the following:—"The Behar Patrika has been killed by an order to deposit security. Later on, the order was rescinded, but the paper was not able to rise again from the dead. The Behare complains of the annoyance to which it is subjected, if it criticises the officials or the Municipality. Yet the Bombay Government has the assurance to say that Anglo-Indian and Indian papers are treated alike. It says this moreover shortly after the press which prints the Bombay Chronicle and Young India had been forbidden to print comments on the Government order against Mrs. Annie Besant, while the Anglo-Indian organs were allowed to attack her! This is, of course, diplomacy."

The Indian Press Act.

HINDU, Madras, July 29th, 1916.

28. The Hindu, of the 29th July, states:—"Mr. N. C. Kelkar writes to us that he handed in a message at the Poona Telegraph office meant for the Hindu, on Sunday evening last. It was an express press message giving a short account of the celebration of the birthday of Mr. Bal Gangadar Tilak. It appears that the telegram was duly despatched at Poona. But we have not received it up to the time of writing. The only inference that is possible under the circumstances is that the Censor at Madras has prohibited its being passed on to us. The way in which messages have been dealt with in Madras quite recently makes us believe that the person responsible for Censorship does not know what he is about. He hardly seems to realise that, in withholding telegraphic messages intended for the press, he is aiming a blow at the liberty of the press. . . . . Our local Censor is apparently not a person with any turn for humour. For, he does not seem to recognise the fact that in suppressing such messages, he is not achieving anything which is effective and for which either the public or the Government may thank him. If the sender of the message takes care to post to the destination a copy of it, the paper could publish it a day or two afterwards. The local Censor has to be told that his actions are devoid of intelligence, and that he should use his discretion at least to better purpose."

The Censor.

III.—Legislation.

South Indian Mail, Madura, July 24th, 1916.

29. The South Indian Mail, for the week ending 24th July, states:—

The Government of India Amendment Bill.

"The Home Government have introduced a Bill to amend the Government of India Consolidation Act into the House of Lords. The introduction of the Bill at such a juncture is highly objectionable on several grounds. The amended Bill contains provisions of such a grave controversial character that the country finds it difficult to understand why the Government should propose to have recourse to its enactment in such a hurried fashion especially in view of the fact that all controversial measures deserve to be postponed for consideration till the end of this war. . . . . When the Government claims that movements such as the Home Rule one should be pushed aside for the present in consideration of the deadly struggle in which the Empire as a whole is engaged, it is but barest justice to expect that measures such as the Indian Consolidation Act Amendment Bill involving important consequences to the people of India and necessitating a detailed and thorough examination of its several provisions before it can be put on the statute-book should be introduced with due deliberation to the interests of the people concerned."

IV.—Native States.

West Coast Bulletin, Mattancherry, July 21st, 1916.

30. The West Coast Bulletin, of the 21st July, remarks:—"It is now admitted on all hands that the long administration of Sir Rama Varma, G.C.S.I., whose voluntary abdication took place less than two years ago was an exceptionally brilliant success. There were various qualities of head and heart in him which marked him out from the ordinary run of Indian Princes, but the most outstanding feature of his career was his complete freedom from backstairs influences. This it was that showed what admirable stuff Sir Rama Varma was made of, and this it was which prompted the whole people of the State to go down on their knees and beg of their beloved Ruler to desist from the course he had decided to follow, viz., the enjoyment of a well-earned rest. . . . . It was therefore with deep misgivings that the Cochinites accepted the change of Ruler. As Elaya Raja, the present Maharaja was known more for his amiability of temper than for his strength of character and his retiring habits had only accentuated these traits.

Cochin State appointments.

"Certain important appointments recently made by the Cochin Government would serve to show how far the Cochin public were right in their misgivings. The Senior District Judge Mr. P. Narayana Menon recently took leave and Mr. T. M. Krishna Menon, the Senior District Court Sirkar Vakil, was appointed to act for him as Senior District Judge. There can be little doubt as to the fact that by this appointment the claims of Mr. Raghavan Nambiar, the Junior District Judge, was ignored. Mr. Nambiar has acted as Senior District Judge on several occasions, and the public cannot understand on what public grounds Mr. Krishna Menon who is junior to Nambiar in every respect has been allowed to supersede the latter.

"The last Government Gazette announces another appointment which indicates more clearly which way the wind blows. Mr. Anantha Rama Ayyar, Government Advocate, was granted leave and Mr. V. K. Kochunni Menon, Chief Court Vakil, has been appointed to act for him. . . . . We do not want to dilate upon this point any further. We know the Diwan Mr. Bhore to be an upright and conscientious officer, but we are afraid that his position as the chief executive head of the State is becoming rather unpleasant. We are sure that he will have the moral courage to follow the only course open to him under the present circumstances."

31. The Malabar Herald, for the week ending 22nd July, writes:—"One of the latest rumours is in respect of the retirement of Mr. Bhore, I.C.S., Diwan of Cochin, after the completion of his third year of office. To believe or not to believe it is the question. This is too hard to be solved because, not being in the secrecy of Government, we are not supposed to know what takes place in the 'inner chamber.' Consequently we have to fall upon certain probabilities in order to locate the truth or otherwise of what we hear about these changes. Looking at the question in this aspect there are circumstances which would incline one to the belief that Mr. Bhore may either sever his connection with the Cochin Diwanship on the completion of his three years' term, or that he may be granted an extension. When we consider these two alternatives we are likely to be between the devil and the deep sea; since there is nothing that we can possibly assume as a sufficient reason to believe the report that he will be going away after six months which would complete his three years. . . . . It is premature for us to offer any opinion as to how far he has been successful as a Diwan. It is inevitable that opinions should differ; but for our part we cannot be so uncharitable as to pronounce him to be a failure, as some of those in the service would seem to think. . . . . Everybody in Cochin knows, as we do, that Mr. Bhore succeeded a Diwan whose administration was of an extraordinary nature as it was characterized by a degree of restlessness that is seldom found in the annals of the Cochin Diwanship except in one case, that of Mr. Rajagopala Achari. It will thus be seen that for a period of 11 years the Cochin Diwanship was noted for its marvellous activity barring the period covered by the Diwanship of Mr. Pattabhi Rama Rao, which was remarkable for its weak-kneed tendency. . . . . If therefore we suppose, as we should do that Mr. Bhore has done nothing remarkable from an administrative standpoint, it is because the State machinery is in a condition to admit of no serious meddling. . . . . It must, therefore, be said to the credit of Mr. Bhore that, though there has been nothing to mark him out as a statesman, there is the outstanding fact to be recognized that, in spite of these economic difficulties, disturbing, as they do, the revenue of Cochin, he has so far been successful in maintaining the financial equilibrium of the State. Let us give him credit at least for this and wait till he retires. If in consideration of this fact the Darbar has found him to be a careful husbandman, that alone may be taken as a sufficient reason for the extension of his service, as, on the expiry of it the war will have been over and peace settled in Europe. Be that as it may it is too premature to consider seriously the report of his retirement after the third year of his service."

MALABAR HERALD, British Cochin, July 22nd, 1916.

The Cochin Diwanship.

32. The Karnataka, of the 26th July, writes:—"May we venture to request the gentle and genial Secretary to Government that he might be pleased to spare a few minutes for looking into the present system of forwarding copies of Government Orders and other official documents to the press? Firstly, these documents are sometimes sent to the press weeks, if not months, after they are actually signed and issued from the office. Secondly, really important papers are sometimes not sent, while less important or unimportant ones are poured in profusion. We may also add that mufassal newspapers are often seen to obtain Government Orders, etc., much earlier than the local prints. If the efficiency loving Secretary will kindly bestow some little thought on this subject, we are sure that it will not be viewed in any quarter as waste of public time."

KARNATAKA, Bangalore City, July 26th, 1916.

KARNATAKA, Bangalore City, July 26th, 1916.

The Mysore Efficiency Audit branch.

33. The Karnataka, of the 26th July, observes:—"Our readers must have perused with considerable interest the reply furnished by Mr. D. M. Narasinga Rao (Secretary to Government) to the non-official members of the Legislative Council in regard to the work of the Efficiency Audit branch. No one who knows Mr. Narasinga Rao could ever expect that a cause espoused by him would go without such a keen and clever defence. While some of the lines of work he pointed out are important and urgent, it must be said that the general efficiency of the administration—especially in districts and taluks,—has not improved to any appreciable extent since the inauguration of the branch. . . . . The officer immediately in charge of the branch is, we suppose, a comparatively junior officer, and as such is not likely to be looked up to for light and guidance. The references must therefore necessarily be to the able and versatile Secretary himself. We are gently cautioned that the Audit inspections "are intended not so much to discover and make much of irregularities, but rather to improve the general system of work.' Does this mean that irregularities are to be passed over in silence, and that sweet generalizations alone are to command all the attention of the Audit officers? If the Audit branch is such a toothless, clawless, innocuous body, it will undoubtedly win the appreciation of several pious people; but it may not win the gratitude of those who are longing for a better morale among our public servants."

UNITED INDIA AND NATIVE STATES, Madras, July 27th, 1916.

Brahmans v. Non-Brahmans in the Mysore State.

34. In a leader on this subject, United India and Native States, for the week ending 27th July, says:—"The recent budget debate in the Mysore Legistative Council was rendered very lively by a speech made by Mr. H. Narasinga Rao championing the interests of the Brahmans for official preferment as against the non-Brahmans whom the Mysore Darbar are said to be unduly favouring at the expense of the Brahmans. . . . . Mr. Narasinga Rao admits that the percentage of Brahmans to the non-Brahman population of the village is 1 to 30 and that at present all the schools and colleges in the State are flooded with this small community to the exclusion of the more backward classes, and the Darbar tries to remove this inequality which has resulted in the virtual exclusion of the more numerical sections of the population. . . . . We are no opponents of progress among Brahmans but we hold strongly that the education of the backward classes should receive at least equal encouragement and until such time as the latter are able to stand on their own legs they must be afforded special encouragement in the shape of scholarships so that they may not lag behind hopelessly or be handicapped in the struggle for existence. . . . . We have, of course, no quarrel with Mr. Narasinga Rao when he idealises the Brahmans who, he says, are by birth and tradition, by habits and surroundings, fit for intellectual studies and intellectual occupations although we must confess our inability to perceive in South Indian Brahmans (for whom alone Mr. Narasinga Rao was apparently speaking) intellectual and literary prodigies like Carlyle or Macaulay or DeQuincey or Thackeray. True they are successful in passing examinations—a faculty which Mr. Narasinga Rao seems to have mistaken for signs of intellectual pre-eminence. . . . . We sincerely regret the tone of unfairness and antagonism to the backward classes underlying the last statement as it is calculated to stir up ill-feeling between Brahmans and non-Brahmans which Mr. Narasinga Rao professed to be willing to avoid. His intervention in the debate was unfortunate in every respect although his remarks concerning the fitness of non-Brahmans for less intellectual pursuits was characterised by a spirit of brutal frankness."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

35. The Swadesamitran, of the 15th July, expresses its regret at the resolutions passed at this conference not having been published in India, though they were communicated by wire immediately to the colonies, and doubts whether India will be left out altogether in the great economic struggle, which is bound to begin after the end of the war.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 15th, 1916.

The Allies' Economic Conference.

36. The Swadesamitran, of the 15th July, writes:—Ceylon resembles India in many respects and the Ceylonese belong to the same race as the Indians. It is the British that rule over Ceylon also. It is, therefore, surprising that Ceylon should have progressed faster than India. Those reforms, for the introduction of which we, in India, are still agitating, have already been adopted by the Ceylon Government. Our prayer that at least a portion of the excise revenue should be given over to local institutions has not yet been granted by the Government here. But in Ceylon, it is years since the excise revenue has been handed over to local institutions. Similarly, our Government has not listened to our demand for making primary education free and compulsory. But it is clear from the discussion which took place at the last meeting of the Ceylon Legislative Council that free and compulsory education is already being given in the rural areas. The method adopted to bring this about is a very sound one, which the British Government can well afford to follow. The municipalities in towns and local boards in rural areas are levying a small cess for this purpose and the amount thus collected is utilised for the upkeep of the schools. Why should not the Provincial Governments in India adopt the same course? Why should the Government object even if a municipality volunteers to levy such a cess?

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 15th, 1916.

India and Ceylon.

37. The Andhrapatrika, of the 26th July, says:—The greater part of Pozieres has now fallen into British hands. The attempt of the Germans near Verdun has failed. Although the situation of the Allies is satisfactory, it cannot yet be said that they have entered the path of certain victory. It is natural that the Germans will do their utmost to retrieve their loss. It is impossible to say where and how they will do so. The Allies should with immense forces act on the offensive simultaneously at all points in order to gain the victory.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, July 26th, 1916.

The war.

The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 21st July*, writes:—Most British politicians tried their best to avert the war. But their efforts did not meet with success. Many officers resigned and finally German wickedness caused the actual outbreak of the war. Not only the belligerents but the whole world is suffering inexpressible distress. The enemy, too, has gained nothing. He too has lost millions of men and immeasurable wealth. He lost all his possessions in South Africa. All his trade and industries are at a standstill. He gets none of the vast profits from these sources. The whole of Europe has been ruined by the war. The distress of the British administrators knows no bounds. None of the Cabinet Ministers had anticipated the war. It broke out suddenly. Mr. Asquith happened to be the Prime Minister at this critical juncture. It is almost a Herculean task to him to maintain the reputation of his exalted position. Conscription had to be resorted to. Youths of eighteen and old men have to be compelled to go to the front. There is much opposition to such compulsion. Many of the leaders are engaged in creating needless embarrassment in every quarter. Most matters are military secrets. Many oppose, owing to their failure to realise the truth of the situation and the ministers feel so exasperated at times as to think of resigning. Mr. Asquith and others are bearing all this distress admirably, and are making gigantic efforts solely in the interests of the Empire and we hope that these efforts will be crowned with success.

CHAKRAVARTI, Cochin, July 22nd, 1916.

How to get self-government.

38. Referring to the recent rebellion in Ireland, the Chakravarti, of the 22nd July, says:—After this rebellion, the British Parliament is proposing to grant self-government to Ireland, with certain restrictions, instead of waiting till the conclusion of the war. When India has been praying for the last some years that she should be given self-government, she is bluntly and angrily told that this will not be given to her. But when Ireland gave the British Government two blows on their cheeks and asked for self-government, the latter's reply was "Here, take it." Yes. It is weeping children that get milk. Whatever may happen to them, the Indians will not break the law.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 23rd, 1916.

"Some light upon the war."

39. The Qaumi Report, of the 23rd July, referring to the list of casualties given by Reuter the day before yesterday and to the additional loan called for by Mr. Asquith for war expenditure, says:—"We can understand how such a dreadful loss of life and property and the waste of the strength of the empire must weigh heavily on the minds of the people and that there is no help or compensation for it. But after all, war is war and no one has the right to bemoan his individual losses.

As regards the Gallipoli and Mesopotamian affairs there is no doubt that some one is responsible for the blunder. The indignation of the British nation is so severe that it is never disposed to pardon the blunderer. The secret will probably be revealed after the war.

It is obvious that British national wrath is, in this instance, inopportune. The nation should patiently endure these untoward events and take heed to the statement of the Prime Minister that in the opinion of military and political advisers the publication of any further information on the subject is inadvisable.

Referring to the question of a general election the writer remarks that such a step would cause great political excitement in England and constitute a serious blunder on the part of the British people.

II.—HOME ADMINISTRATION.

PRAPANCHA MITRAN, Madras, July 21st, 1916.

The Commissioner of Police, Madras.

40. Referring to the appointment of Mr. Cardozo, the Superintendent of Railway Police at Trichinopoly, to act as the Commissioner of Police, Madras, the Prapancha Mitran, of the 21st July, says:—When Mr. Parankusam Nayudu has been successfully discharging the duties of this post for the last three months, we wonder what necessity there was for the Government to appoint Mr. Cardozo to this place now. We can assign only one reason for it, and that is the fear on the part of the Government that, if an Indian is allowed to act as Commissioner for the full period of six months, it may create a precedent and give room for the Indians to claim the appointment as a matter of right on a future occasion.

SOUTH INDIAN MAIL, Madura, July 17th, 1916.

The Police department.

41. The Tamil supplement to the South Indian Mail, of the 17th July, is of opinion that the low morale of the constabulary in this country is due to their meagre educational qualifications and petty salaries, which do not come up even to the limit of the wages earned by a labourer, without all the restraints and the insults at the hands of his superiors to which a Police constable is subject, and observes that, if the Police are to protect and not tease the people, the Matriculation examination should be fixed as the lowest educational qualification for a constable and his minimum sarly as Rs. 15.

(b) Courts.

42. The Vidyabhanu, of the 17th July, is of opinion that the reason for the village munsiff's courts not being as popular now as they were once is that the present-day village munsiffs do not, on account of their qualifications and status, command any respect from the villagers and advocating the revival of the old panchayats as the the best remedy for the existing state of affairs, offers the following additional suggestions in the matter:— VIDYABHANU, Konapet, July 17th, 1916.

Village courts.

(1) Every big village should have one panchayat comprising competent men and if the villages are small, the villages situated within a radius of 2 miles may be grouped together for this purpose;

(2) the head of the panchayat should be a retired official and, if no such person is available, an educated man of status should be selected from the village;

(3) these panchayats should be given power to decide all civil suits, the value of which does not exceed Rs. 50, and district munsiffs should be prevented from taking cognisance of such suits;

(4) no stamp fees should be levied for suits tried in panchayat courts and these courts should have the power of executing their decrees;

(6) in criminal cases, the panchayats should be given slightly larger powers than those now exercised by village munsiffs. But the barbarous punishment of putting one in stocks should be removed from the Statute Books.

The Dravidabhimani, of the 21st July, also expresses the view that the revival of the panchayat courts will put an end to the influx of petty civil suits in District Munsiff's Courts and at the same time spare the villages a good deal of unnecessary expenditure and worry. DRAVIDABHIMANI, Salem, July 21st, 1916.

The Yogakshemam, of the 21st July, says:—When we consider the facility enjoyed by the people of Malabar in getting justice done to them by the village courts in petty civil suits without much expense, the Sirkars of Cochin and Travancore are increasing the cost of dispensing justice by the appointment of additional munsiffs and judges. The Cochin Sirkar has established a few panchayats, but they now form a branch of the Revenue department, while there is no panchayat system at all in Travancore. As there are a large number of educated men in Travancore and Cochin, there should be no difficulty in these States in securing men, who are willing to serve on the village courts. YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, July 21st, 1916.

Village courts.

Referring to the working of the village courts in this Presidency, the Manorama, of the 21st July, says:—Although the Government desire to reform the village courts and to have them worked in a more satisfactory manner than hitherto, it ought to be said that the efforts made or proposed to be made by the Government in that direction are not at all adequate. We do not think that the Government have understood all the defects in the working of the present village courts. As a remedial measure, the Government propose to introduce a Bill in the Legislative Council to regulate and improve the working of these courts; but this Bill does not seem to be so beneficial as to give satisfaction to the people. When the civil suits which fall within the jurisdiction of village munsiffs' courts are now being filed in the district munsiffs' courts, it should be presumed that the people have no confidence in the village munsiffs. It is doubtful whether there will be any remedy for this evil, unless village courts are established throughout the Presidency agreeably to the opinion expressed by the people and the Decentralisation Commission. MANORAMA, Calicut, July 21st, 1916.

(d) Education.

43. Referring to the grant of Rs. 16,62,130 to schools managed by local boards and municipalities sanctioned by the Government, the Swadesamitran, of the 17th SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 17th, 1916.

Government grant to schools.

July, says :—While we are grateful to Government for this liberal grant, we have to point out a defect in the present system. As the grants are sanctioned every year, the local bodies are not in a position to know beforehand what the amount of the grant in any particular year will be, and so they are not able to regulate the expenditure in the schools according to the amount sanctioned. If, instead of this, the Government fixes the amount of the grant to be given each year, the local institutions will also fix the scale of expenditure in the schools. If the Government is not able to spend as much money on education as the demands of the country require, it can empower the local institutions to levy a local cess for the balance required by them. It is the absence of such a power that makes it impossible even for such local institutions as are willing to make primary education free and compulsory to raise the required amount of money for doing so. If this power is given to them, it is only such of them as are willing to exercise it that will do so. It is rather unfair on the part of the Government, which, admitting the necessity for the spreading of primary education as fast as possible, is not prepared to make it free and compulsory, to delay empowering even such local institutions as desire to make a move in this direction to do so.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, July 16th, 1916.

The Andhra National College.

44. The Desabhimani, of the 16th July, accuses the Andhra National College with seeking the patronage of the Government in various ways and running counter to national ideals. As an instance in point, it says that the college authorities selected Government officers last year and this year to preside at the anniversaries of the college. It urges that the college should give up the principle of compromise which is likely to let the college gradually slip into the hands of the Government.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 22nd, 1916.

The Syndicate.

45. Referring to the resolution of the Senate of the Madras University to increase the number of the members of the Syndicate, the Andhrapatrika, of the 22nd July, remarks :—It is a fact that the name of the Madras University has received a stain on account of the present Syndicate. Its members are vested with full powers under the University Act. But they have never exercised those powers with a liberal spirit. Belonging as they do to Madras and to the Presidency College and the Christian College, their vision has not extended beyond this city and these institutions. Again, as they themselves have been members of the Syndicate for a very long time past, they have grown more and more conservative and gained influence with the Senate and the Government. The present constitution ignores the educational interests of places outside Madras. We are glad that the Presidency and the Christian Colleges will no longer enjoy their monopoly of power in the University.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

The extraordinary meeting of the Senate.

46. In its leader on the extraordinary meeting of the Senate, the Andhrapatrika, of the 24th July, observes :—

You dig a well and a giant springs up.

The students could not, after all, escape their fate. The Senate have discussed at length about the results of the Intermediate examination. When the discussion was drawing to a close they were in a flurry. They conceived a fear that their prestige might be at stake. All were agreed about the existence of a grave defect in the Intermediate results. All were also agreed that whoever may be at the bottom of it, the students were not, but have passed a judgment that it is the students that must suffer for the fault. Forty-three out of fifty-seven have voted for this strange verdict, and fourteen have voted against it, seeing that the sins of one should not be visited on another's head. It may confound you to hear that while one is convicted another is condemned to undergo the punishment; but yet those that passed this resolution the other day seem to have done so in a state of confusion worse confounded. The Syndicate of the University are responsible for this, and their ingenuity is admirable. They have submitted a report to the Senate in which they lay the whole blame at the door of the Principals of Colleges who, in their opinion, had indiscriminately admitted students into the Intermediate classes. . . . . If it were so why did they wait so long without taking early steps to set matters right? Why should they have kept aloof, while matters took their own course and necessitated this mighty debate in an extraordinary meeting of the Senate? It has taken them six years to realise that it was a mistake on their part to have recognised the School Final Examination as a standard test.

Have they, even this year advised the Senate to reject the School Final as a standard test? They have never done so. Which intelligent man believes that this argument has now been advanced by them for any purpose other than merely explaining away matters? . . . . A few Principals may have been lenient in their admissions. How can this justify the Syndicate, however august a body it may be, to condemn all Principals as wanting in discretion? . . . . The students are not to blame in the matter, nor are the Principals of colleges. Who else than the examiners and the members of the Syndicate are responsible for it? . . . . Their defence is all a fit, and that it is no ordinary one is borne out by this. They say that it is no use passing more this year, and that there is no room in the colleges for more. It passes our comprehension to realise the genius of the Syndicate. . . . . They are not even afraid that those who hear it may laugh at it. What if they laugh, so long as the entire authority is in their hands? . . . . The Vice-Chancellor that presided over the meeting displayed his skill in keeping the assembly under a spell. . . . . From all this the readers may easily understand whether the members of the Senate were under the influence of a spell or not. Was the resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Seshagiri Ayyar disposed of, or still open for discussion? Was the ruling of the Vice-Chancellor legal, or ultra vires? The Vice-Chancellor has the authority to guide the conduct of business in a meeting, but we cannot see that he has any power to stay a discussion at his discretion. That a committee has been appointed to consider about the coming year does not mean that nothing may be done for this year.

The proposition introduced by Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar has not been discussed and voted upon, and so long as that is so, the Vice-Chancellor cannot stand in the way. The members of the Senate will discuss this question and revive the proceedings. We hope that proper steps will be taken.

47. Referring to the recent meeting of the Senate, the Andhrapatrika, of the 25th July, says:—It is not creditable to the University they govern that the Rev. Mr. Pittendrigh and the Rev. Mr. Macphail should have shown gross intolerance in the discussion of the question relating to the Intermediate examination. Mr. Macphail seems to have forgotten that he was in a respectable society when he spoke of students as rickshaw coolies. He said that somebody complained that the Educational authorities attempted to keep down higher education out of a political motive. The authorities have given room enough for such a complaint. They have opposed every liberal policy proposed. Until the Indians are given greater independence in the administration of the university, it will not be wrong to say that the Government are influenced by political interests in this matter. It was not right on the part of Mr. Macphail to have said that the papers were spreading lies. Mr. Pittendrigh said that the resolution of Mr. Justice Seshagiri Ayyar raised a huge ghost. Yes the resolution will appear to be such to men of an arbitrary turn of mind. The Syndicate of the University being unable to answer questions satisfactorily indulged in speaking whatever was uppermost on their lips. But this will not avail in the twentieth century.

The Senate meeting.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 25th, 1916.

A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 26th July, says:—Granting that our boys are rickshaw coolies, does it not reflect indiscretion on the part of the Principals to have admitted them into their colleges? The boys are rickshaw coolies and the Principals, indiscreet persons; who, then, are the wise? Although the speaker is a Missionary preaching the religion of Christ, he has not cultivated his patience in the least. He is not to blame. It is the goddess of wrath which had gained a mastery over him that made him speak like that.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 26th, 1916.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 26th, 1916.

The weekly issue of the Andhrapatrika, dated the 26th July, says:—It is not known how the Vice-Chancellor tolerated the disrespectful language of Mr. Macphail that rickshaw coolies appear for examinations. The patience and fairness of the Missionaries has now been revealed. When the Vice-Chancellor was asked what became of the Hon'ble Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's resolution, he said that the meeting had terminated. This is curious. There is no connection between Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's resolution and that of Mr. Moffat. Is it fair to have introduced and accepted another resolution when Mr. Ayyar's resolution had not been disposed of. Such a thing would not have happened even in ordinary meetings. It is difficult to understand how it happened in the meeting of the Senate.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 15th, 1916.

48. The Kistnapatrika, of the 15th July, asks if the large percentage of failures in the University examinations is due to any fault on the part of students and answers that it is not, because the students in the higher classes are not boys, but youths receiving education at a high cost away from their homes, and possessed of a sense of responsibility. It says that the Educational department should arrange to return the answer papers to students and enable them to appeal if they feel aggrieved. It exhorts the educated classes to evince an interest in the matter and trace out the causes for the failure of 80 per cent of the candidates.

The University examinations.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 25th, 1916.

49. The Andhrapatrika, of the 25th July, says:—At a meeting, at Asansol, of the Indian Mining and Geological Institute, Sir Thomas Holland said in the course of his speech that the Tata Steel Company afforded an example of how much work could be done by Indian labourers if they were weaned betimes from the so-called higher educational course and put to real education. There can be no stronger comment on the present system of higher education. May the Syndicate of our University note this.

Higher education.

SWADESABHIMANI, Mangalore, July 21st, 1916.

50. In continuation of the article in a previous issue on the subject of female education in India (vide report No. 29, article 39), the Swadesabhimani, of the 21st July, after summarizing the recommendations of the various District Boards and Municipalities, proceeds to observe:—The suggestions made by the various local bodies are more or less the suggestions made by their Presidents or Vice-Presidents. The other members, either because they were unable to comprehend the subjects they were asked to discuss or because of their ingrained habits of indolence and neglect of duty, merely said "Aye" to whatever the presiding officers proposed. The result of the enquiry will thus be that the Government is recommended to proceed on the very lines on which they have been working in the past; and it will be said that with the larger funds that will be available at the close of the war, the progress will be more rapid. The Government will thus cry up their own policy and make it appear in the eyes of the Parliament that the people are praising it, and the report that will then be written along with the views of the public thus ascertained will eventually be consigned to the shelves of parliamentary records.

Female education in India.

Most of the proposals now made by the local bodies depend upon the possibility of finding funds. Already there are complaints in some of the Anglo-Indian papers that India is not rendering adequate pecuniary help to the empire in the present crisis. Although the Government do not endorse this view if the war should go on for some time more, it will be our duty, in token of our loyalty, to render whatever further aid our means will permit. It is therefore highly improbable that we shall find money in these critical times even for such an important object like the spread of female education. Our suggestions in this respect, therefore, will be no better than the wishes of a beggar (wanting to ride). Again, what is meant by the suggestion that the Local Boards should bear the burden of spreading primary education? The work of these bodies depends wholly on the experts under them. The Boards have only the power of sanctioning the money required for carrying out the suggestions made by the officers of the Engineering and Health departments and other experts. They have not the freedom of discussing the actual nature of the requirements. If they have no money, they borrow either from Government or from some other source. The Government give some grants too. The proposals before these Boards seldom meet with any opposition. Even if objections are raised, they are seldom heeded, and the members thus opposing, on discovering their own helplessness, lose their interest in the work of the Board and are not eager to be re-elected. Thus, those that are really patriotic and desirous of serving the public stand aloof, while those that are hankering after titles or have some selfish motive, such as using their influence to get some employment for their relations and friends, enter these Boards. The Madras Corporation ought to be a model for the whole presidency in the art of local self-government. The methods of this body which are frequently reported in the papers will be sufficient to show the truth about the constitution of our local bodies.

51. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 21st July, in a leading article draws up a contrast between the progress of elementary education in British India and the results achieved by Baroda in this direction during the last ten years under a system of compulsory primary education and thereupon remarks:—Although the credit of having introduced modern modes of locomotion, such as railways and motor vehicles, belongs to the British, it is curious to find that in the matter of educational policy they prefer the antiquated mode of travelling in a bullock cart, while even Baroda is up to date and recognises the advantages of a railway. If the Government should only introduce the system of compulsory primary education, all the other problems, such as the spread of secondary and higher education, the elevation of the depressed classes, and the extension of female education, will be solved without any difficulty. When even Baroda, with a population of only 20 lakhs, has shown itself alive to the responsibility of imparting the gift of elementary education to all its subjects and has already shown the splendid results of that policy, it is most unfortunate that our British authorities should be reluctant to follow the example. The progress of education in Baroda is an excellent answer to those who are in the habit of proclaiming the incapacity of the Indians to govern themselves as an excuse for not granting swaraj to them.

52. Referring to the proposal of the Government of India that a certain portion of the education in western medical science should be imparted in the vernaculars, the Chakravarti, of the 22nd July, after dwelling at some length on the impracticability of such a step, expresses the opinion that it is towards the improvement of the Unāni and Ayurvēdic medical systems that the attention of the Government ought to be directed.

CHAKRAVARTI, Cochin, July 22nd, 1916.

53. The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 19th July, writes:—The latent grievance of the people of this country is the question of higher education. The country rightly or wrongly wishes that its children should not remain ignorant and uneducated. But ordinary men rarely understand that the progress of higher education is in inverse ratio to the desire for it. Time was when the Madras university deplored the paucity of candidates and its examination papers were comparatively dignified and sound. There was a demand for students in the higher classes and valuable scholarships were given and educational facilities were afforded them. To-day the same heaven and earth exist, but the change in the state of affairs is not only amazing but deplorable. The number of people weeping over the university is increasing every year, but for the last two years it has become incumbent upon every one interested in education to express his disapproval of the severity of the university. Students, teachers, parents and outsiders are united in this disapproval, and every one is asking the question why our students fail in examinations. We attributed the unprecedented list of failures at last year's examination to Ourselves and higher education.

accident, but the results of the University examination of this year convinced us that failure is the rule and appears to be based upon some definite principles.

Intermediate candidates have been treated with marked severity, but no one seems to know who is responsible for it. Apparently there are two ways of solving the difficulty :—

Firstly, it may be said that the condition of the colleges is unsatisfactory. Either the staff does not work or does not know how to work, and it necessarily follows that the students of incompetent teachers are bound to turn out incompetent. This idea is, however, incorrect, for the advancement of the colleges is the outcome of a regular system. The staff are not defective for they have obtained degrees, and are trained men with certificates by the same university. Hence it is astounding that the holders of certificates of fitness should prove to be regarded as incompetent and their pupils unfit.

Secondly, the idea is that the University examiners have fixed a higher standard of attainment than is necessary and hence candidates are bound to fall below it. Obviously this argument is also unsound, for the standard of the university is before us and the colleges, and if the same standard had been used, there is no doubt that 80 per cent of our students would have been successful.

It is very strange that the university does not notify what kind of knowledge is expected of the candidates and what kind of instruction should be imparted by the teachers.

The result of the School Final examination this year is generally regrettable. Ever since the moderation system has been introduced the hardships of the pupils have increased, and it is true that parents being despairing of these difficulties are depriving their children of their education. It is a matter for reflection as to how a man of ordinary means who has to educate two or three of his children can bear the expense of educating those who fail in the School Final examination for two or three years and how can higher education progress in the country? We think that the Government should interfere with the university and in college affairs and rectify the errors of both, otherwise the friction between the university and the supporters of education in the country will increase and the educational problem of the university will become a political question. It is possible that in view of these university difficulties people of the country fear the university may establish a rival university. For instance at present there is a proposal to do so in the Telugu districts and if it materialises, perhaps the Brahmans will establish their own university and the Hindus theirs. Many are of opinion that if two rival universities should exist, there would be great facilities in the matter of education.

We think that Lord Curzon's view in the matter of universities do not conform to the climatic conditions of the country and one proof of it is that the Government have sanctioned the establishment of sectarian universities.

We regret that the old and experienced universities are establishing awkward precedents and although they have concealed most of their defects under cover of their experience, the time has now arrived to rectify matters.

We hope that our new Viceroy Lord Chelmsford will mend matters and satisfactorily reverse the principles of education in India.

The Bellary Municipality.

54. In an article complaining about the lack of proper supervision over the conservancy department of the Bellary Municipality, the Bharathi, of the 21st July,* observes :—Of the two principal pettahs or bazaars in the town, while the one is almost deserted since the removal of the military staff from this centre and deserves to be brought under cultivation, the other is an exceedingly busy centre, but the conservancy arrangements are so unsatisfactory that the streets are full of the contents of dust-bins and the drains are almost blocked up by the accumulation of filth. While the bigger streets themselves are allowed to be so very filthy, it is easy to see that the insanitary condition of the smaller streets must be beyond description. The rains are the only cleansing agents. Street-lighting too is done in so niggardly a fashion that all the lights go out for want of oil in the earlier part of the night and the whole city is enveloped in darkness except for the gas lights in a few important places. A vegetable market has been built; but it has neither a door frame nor shutters which admit of the building being locked, with the result that at night time it forms a convenient latrine to persons of both sexes. It is a market place only in name. The meat stall is at present in a street opposite shroff bazaar. This was considered insanitary and too central a place and the Government seems to have approved the proposal of a Muhammadan to build a stall at his expense just behind the vegetable market. The location of the meat stall at this new place will render the latter equally insanitary. The protests submitted to the Legislative Council by the Veerashaivas, Brahmans and the Vaishyas against the proposal seem to have been of no avail. The cause of all this is that the Chairman as well as the councillors seek election only for gaining additional status and not one of them seems to be mindful of the nature of his duties. Now that the new elected member of the Legislative Council and the Chairman are both new to their places, it is to be hoped that these at least will proceed to place the affairs of the municipality on a more satisfactory basis.

55. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 21st July, referring to the just and equitable rule of the King-Emperor whose subjects we all are, says that under British Raj the proverb "The lion and the lamb drink together at one watering-place," is true.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, July 21st, 1916.

"The Corporation and the people."

The Corporation, which is one of the numerous instances of the manifold benefits of the generous rule of the British, has established a health department for the welfare of the people and the good of the country. This department has made roads and drains, arranged for a supply of good and pure water and put up lights in the roads and streets. In fact the officers of this department are the guardians of public health.

It is manifest what trouble was taken and vast sums of money spent by the Madras Corporation on the conservancy of the city. It is equally manifest how patiently the people have endured the increasing burden of taxation imposed on them to meet this heavy expenditure.

In view of this heavy outlay the Corporation has recently adopted an economical policy by removing lamps from several of the roads and streets! This darkness, of which no previous notice was given, has created amazement in the minds of some people who in a whisper enquire the cause of darkness when a lighting-tax is being levied. If the Corporation has reduction of expenditure in view, why has so much money been spent on prosecutions and compensation and why did it agree to pay such large sums without demur? Instead of wasting its time and money in useless matters, it should direct its attention to the dearness of food stuffs and ascertain the causes of the rise in prices especially in the city of Madras.

(f) Land Revenue and Settlement.

56. Referring to the present publication of the despatch sent by the Government of India six years back to the Secretary of State, regarding the proposal of the Decentralisation Commission to enact as a legislative measure the principles of land revenue collection in this country, the Vidyabhanu, of the 17th July, observes:—We wonder why this despatch, which was purposely shelved all these six years, has been published now. The Government would have done well in putting off its publication till the end of the war. It is funny indeed that the authorities, who have been against any contentious measure being discussed while the war is going on, have published this despatch now. The reasons assigned by the Government of India for disapproving the recommendation of the Decentralisation Commission are curious. It has by one stroke of its pen rejected the arguments, adduced by an expert in land revenue matters like the late R. C. Dutt, advocating the introduction of a system of permanent settlement in India. But we cling to our opinion that, if the suggestion of the Decentralisation Commission is not adopted, it will lead to the authorities increasing the land revenue according to their pleasure as happened in the case of Madura recently. So the people should lose no time in convening public meetings and protesting against the view of the Government of India. Unless a system of permanent settlement is introduced soon, the ryot will always be at the mercy of the officials, which is not at all desirable. So it is the duty of the people to try to remedy this.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 20th, 1916.

Referring to the despatch of the Government of India, the Swadesa mitran, of the 20th July, observes:—There is no foundation whatever for the statement of the Government of India in this despatch that the present system of land revenue settlement in India is based on the ancient custom of the country, according to which the Government had a share in the produce of all cultivated lands in the country, though the exact proportion of this share was not fixed. All that the ancient smritis say is that the king has a right to take $\frac{1}{6}$ to $\frac{1}{32}$ of the income of every subject; but nowhere is it mentioned that the king is the owner of the lands. So the present system can in no wise be said be to be a reproduction of an ancient custom of the country. It can be traced, perhaps, to the chaotic condition in which this country was when the British entered it. Several petty chiefs had conquered separate portions of the country and were collecting as much as possible as taxes from the people. They never cared for any principles or justice. It is by conquering these chiefs that the British acquired a control over India and naturally they learnt the doctrine that all the lands in the country belonged to them from the independent autocratic chiefs whom they replaced. But as the then British statesmen thought that a wholesale application of this doctrine would terrify the ryots and make them run away, they laid it down that a moderate proportion of the produce from lands should be paid to the king. This proportion has been gradually increasing and now the State claims all the produce to be their own! During the last 150 years when India has been under the British rule, there were occasions when the authorities had to admit that the mirsasidars were the owners of the lands. If it is accepted that a mirasidar has the right of enjoying the lands and taking the major portion of the produce, how can it be said that the Government has a share in the produce, though the exact proportion of this share is not known? There was a discussion between the Government of India and the Secretary of State nearly 70 years back over the question whether the land assessment was a tax or varam. Where was the necessity for this discussion, if the existing system of settlement is based on ancient customs? The Government is trying to establish this view gradually. It was Lord Curzon who asserted definitely for the first time that the ancient customs of this country empowered the Government to take a portion of the produce from lands. His successor, Lord Minto, repeated it and adduced it as an argument to prevent the Secretary of State from giving effect to the recommendation of the Decentralisation Commission. Fortunately, the Secretary of Sate added the words "for the present" in his order declining to give effect to the recommendation. As it is now six years since this was done, the people are justified in demanding that the Government should give up its unfounded theory and give effect to the recommendation of the Commission.

VIDYABHANU, Konapet, July 13th, 1916.

Companies are helping foreign trade materially by levying higher rates for the carriage of indigenous goods. Even in inland trade they make this difference. Our readers are aware that Delhi and Cawnpore are both famous for trade in cotton. But they will be surprised to learn that the rates charged by the railways for carrying cotton to Cawnpore from any place are lower than those charged for carrying it to Delhi. The reason for this is not far to seek. The Cotton Mill at Cawnpore is a European concern, while that at Delhi is Indian. All these show clearly that, in the interests of the people of this country, the management of railways by the Government will be much better than their management by private companies.

"A word to railway travellers."

58. Writing under the heading "A word to railway travellers" a correspondent of the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 26th July, subscribing himself "Narayana Sharma" observes that although it is nearly half a century since the introduction of railways into this country it is deplorable that the masses are still totally ignorant of their rights in this connection and after enumerating the railway rules as to the penalty laid down for forcing into any compartment more than the prescribed number of passengers, remarks that the persistant violation of these rules by the railway subordinates in a most highhanded manner, which is a common sight in India, would not be tolerated in any other country in the world. The writer next observes that, in self-governing countries like England, if there should be such violation of the rules the people would at once retaliate and that the one great fault of the Indians is that they patiently put up with all kinds of highhandedness, and exhorts the people not to be of too philosophical a turn and meekly submit to hardship and indignities, but boldly assert their rights. The writer concludes as follows:—

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore, July 26th, 1916.

"While it is not in the nature of cattle even not to stand unjust harassment, are you worse than cattle that you should fail to assert the rights justly accorded to you by law?

"N.B.—An association has been started in Bombay to enquire into the complaints arising from the railway administration. It would be well to organise a similar association in the Kannada land. It behoves patriotic citizens to give due attention to the subject."

(k) General.

The new Legislative Council.

59. The Swadesamitran, of the 17th July, writes:—As the newly elected members will take their seats at the next meeting of the Legislative Council, we would like to say a few words about the work they have to do at this meeting. Though this is the first meeting which the new members attend, the fact that many important events have happened within the last three months and that there was no opportunity for a mutual exchange of views regarding these events between the Government and the people, makes it necessary that the elected members should take the earliest opportunity of discussing about them in the Council by means of interpellations and resolutions. The members should not think that, as it is the very first meeting, they should not attend to any active business. Perhaps the question may arise whether the new members can exercise their rights before taking the oath of fealty. But we have no doubt in the matter; for the Government can invite them to be present at the meeting only after recognising them as members, and again, even on the side of the Government, the official members have to take the oath of fealty and if these members can exercise their right as such before they take their oath, there is nothing to prevent the non-official members also doing so. So the latter should promptly give notice of their interpellations and resolutions on the several important events that have occurred within the last three months. The reclassification of irrigational sources in the North Arcot district, which was begun with the object of reducing the rate of assessment fixed at the last resettlement, has in effect increased it further and this requires to be attended to immediately, in the interests of the poor agriculturists. The action of the Government in the case of New India, the warnings given to newspapers by the Government under the Press Act, the article in the Madras Mail suspecting the loyalty of the Indians and objecting to their being given military training and several other public grievances have to be brought to the notice of the Government, which should be acquainted with the public opinion on each question. As there may be no meeting of the Legislative Council again till November next, it is very necessary that as many public grievances as possible should be brought to notice at this meeting.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 19th, 1916.

The Madras Legislative Council.

60. In its leader on the subject of the Madras Legislative Council, the Andhrapatrika, of the 19th July, says:—Lord Carmichael has reduced the number of official members in the Bengal Legislative Council by two and nominated two new non-official members in their place. We hope that His Excellency Lord Pentland will follow this example and increase the number of the nominated non-official members of the Madras Legislative Council. The South Indian Chamber of Commerce, which is representative of the Indian trading community, has long been requesting the Government in vain to allow it the privilege of electing a member to represent it in the Legislative Council. The Government are not even pleased to nominate a member on behalf of that body. This is unfair and the Government will do well to remove this unfairness at least now. . . . . Nominated members watch the interests of those merely on whose behalf they are nominated and manifest no acquaintance with, and do not interest themselves in, other matters coming up for discussion in the Council. The Government should consider this matter deeply and nominate, as members, persons who are bold and who possess a wide experience of the world.

The banks of the Cauvery in Kottaiyur.

61. A correspondent of the Swadesamitran, of the 15th July, invites the attention of the authorities to the weak condition of the northern bank of the Cauvery where it passes through the village of Kottaiyur, about which a number of petitions seem to have been sent to the Public Works Department, but with no avail, and prays that, in consideration of the present floods in the river and the impending danger to the village by a breach in the bank, the authorities should lose no time in attending to this matter.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 14th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant and the authorities.

62. The Swadesamitran, of the 14th July, reproduces the substance of the comments of the leader in the Hindu of the 13th July on the action taken by the Government of Bombay under the heading "Misapplication of the Defence of India Act."

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, July 14th, 1916.

Referring to this subject, the Prapanchamitran, of the 14th July, says:—There is no doubt that this order will be received with mingled feelings of regret and terror by the people. When the Government of Madras recently demanded security from Mrs. Besant, there was a hue and cry all over India and every one supported her. She did not flinch in the least. On the other hand, her demand for swaraj became louder. Speeches were delivered by the head of each Provincial administration on some occasion or other after this event and no one, except the Governor of Bombay, expressed the opinion that a discussion about politics at this juncture was not desirable. Even this statement was made in the course of his address to the Sirdars of his Province, who never dabbled in politics. So we thought then that he referred only to Mrs. Besant, and his present order has cleared all doubts about it. We are told that, in addition to issuing an order prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering his Province, Lord Willingdon has prohibited the newspapers in Bombay from discussing the action taken by his Government. If this is true, he has tried to curtail the liberty of the press also and his conduct is doubly regrettable. We have no admiration for Mrs. Besant or her mahatmas personally. But no one can deny that for the last two years she has been working hard for the benefit of India. All that she has been doing is demanding swaraj for India constantly. But how can this be an offence? Is it sedition to try to acquire swaraj under the British Empire? If it is so, the Government will do well to send round a circular to that effect. England has always afforded protection to those who had to run away from their country for having tried to obtain her freedom and helped them in achieving their object. She has, therefore, been styled the "cradle of liberty". Even now she has joined the war only to protect the interests of smaller States. So it is against the British spirit to find fault with the campaign of Mrs. Besant to acquire swaraj for India. We hope our new Viceroy, Lord Chelmsford, will soon interfere in this matter and safeguard the liberty of the people and the press.

Under the heading "The Defence of India Act and Mrs. Besant," the Lokopakari, of the 17th July, also expresses its surprise at the Government of Bombay having prevented Mrs. Besant from entering that Presidency and says:—Perhaps it is the fear that she may carry, even into Bombay, her campaign in favour of Home Rule for India, that has made Lord Willingdon issue this order! If it were so, all those who express their opinion constitutionally that the time has come for swaraj being granted to India should be deemed to be disloyal. Even Lord Hardinge and some other gentlemen have spoken of swaraj for India. Are they all disloyal? No harm can befall the Government by the people saying and writing that India should have swaraj, and it is a mistake on the part of the Government to suppress those who do so. Mrs. Besant's name was known only to a few Theosophists till now. The action of the Government of Madras in demanding security from her has served to familiarise her name throughout the country and the present order of the Government of Bombay has published it still further. Neither Mrs. Besant nor any one else can subvert the Government of India. So why cannot the Government magnanimously leave this lady alone? It is well that the Government notes the fact that it is those papers which boldly criticise its actions that have its welfare at heart and not those which are always flattering it.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 17th, 1916.

The Prapanchamitran, of the 21st July, reports the Panjabee to have stated as follows:—It is because the Indians have always believed Mrs. Besant to be a loyal supporter of the British Government that they are surprised at the action of the Governor of Bombay. If that Government has got any evidence to prove that the Indians were wrong in having confided in the loyalty, wisdom and culture of that lady, it is bound to publish it, both in its own interests and in those of the people. The interest which the people have in their own welfare and in that of the Government is keener than the respect they may have for any particular individual, whatever may be their admiration for her or her past service to them. If the people are satisfied as to the necessity of any action in the interests of the country or the Government legally established therein, they are prepared to support such action, whether the individual affected by it is Mrs. Besant or one of their own countrymen. As long as the Government does not take the people into its confidence and convince them of the justice of its action, it has to thank itself, if the people decline to be satisfied.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, July 21st, 1916.

The same paper writes again:—Alas! It looks as if the Government will not leave Mrs. Besant! It appears it has warned her not to write anything which may give umbrage to the feelings of the Japanese. Every other paper can write about Japan; and the Madras Mail can even criticise Japan. But Mrs. Besant should not do so! Japan is no doubt our Ally now. But we do not like the way in which she is behaving towards our own countrymen.

Mrs. Annie Besant.

63. In a leader headed "Mrs. Annie Besant", the Kistnapatrika, of the 15th July (received on the 27th), says:—

. . . . The Governments of Madras and Bombay have declared their disapprobation of the writings and speeches of Mrs. Annie Besant and in a way placed her under a ban. As long as she was solely devoted to Theosophy, the Government looked upon her as their thick friend. Her influence with the Government authorities was well known. When the Hindu University was projected, she had an interview with the

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 15th, 1916.

King-Emperor, and won his hearty esteem. . . . . When the students were suspected to have been drawn into the vortex of the swadeshi movement, and been imbibing race-hatred, she established societies to awaken loyalty in them; and her downright abuse of nationalists like Bipin Chandra Pal and Arabindo Gosh are still ringing in our ears. When now she sets her foot in the political field and holds in her hand the banner of swaraj, the Government lose sight of all her antecedents and begin to look upon her as a sworn foe. They have, in a way, proscribed her writings and speeches. What does this mean? Mrs. Annie Besant is no impetuous youth working hand and glove with the Bengalee youths. She is no short-sighted extremist vomiting fire against the English nation and the British rule. . . . . The emotionalism that makes one overlook the world of facts, the impetuosity that incites a society to revolutionary measures, or the soul of fire that merges the individual in the universal are no elements of Mrs. Besant's character. . . . . In whichever field she may work she can never leave sober methods. . . . . How, then, can her writings or speeches jeopardise the safety of India? Is the word swaraj itself unwelcome to the ear and the eye? How is this possible? Is it not swaraj that like the pulsations of the heart, is ever audible in the inmost souls of the three hundred millions of the sons of India? How can this sound be suppressed, that rises from the heart of the sons of the land? It is this sound that now dances on the tongue of Mrs. Annie Besant and vibrates from her articles. Mrs. Besant may not open her lips; she may lay down her pen. Nevertheless that sound will be imperceptibly transmitted from the souls of the ruled to the hearts of the rulers, and continue to reverberate day and night there, like the celestial voice. In no country, not even in this, do laws exist that can enchain the heart.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, July 16th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

The Desabhimani, of the 16th July, says:—In enforcing the provisions of the Defence of India Act against Mrs. Besant, the Government of Bombay would have done well to show on what grounds they took that step. So far as the knowledge of the people goes, she is loyal, and she neither wrote nor spoke anything against the Government. She always condemned the acts of the enemy. To order such a lady not to set her foot into the Bombay Presidency is to act in violation of British traditions. May Lord Chelmsford cancel the order and restore peace to the country.

HITAKARINI, Ellore. July 23rd, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

The Hitakarini, of the 23rd July, says:—Mrs. Besantis working not for the realisation of any new ideal but for self-government which was heartily promised to India by Queen Victoria and her successors. It is, therefore, highly improper on the part of the Madras and Bombay Governments to enforce the provisions of the Press Act and the Defence of India Act against her. It is a pity that the authorities are indiscriminate in the use of the powers vested in them by law. Although Mrs. Besant's physical body can be restrained, her spirit cannot be. It will continue to work till the goal is reached. The Bombay Government will, therefore, do well to rescind their order against Mrs. Besant. May the Indians show their affection for her by appointing her as president of the forthcoming session of the National Congress and set an example to the authorities! Let us see if righteousness also meets with defeat. May God grant victory to British arms and self-government to India simultaneously!

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 22nd, 1916.

Mrs. Besant and rumours.

64. The Andhrapatrika, of the 22nd July, says:—A rumour is afloat that there is a plot to involve Mrs. Besant in some crime in order to justify the order of the Bombay Government, that false reports are being made ready, and that some persons have reported to the Government that guns and bombs are concealed at Adyar. But will the Madras Government allow such rumours to circulate? Will they create unrest in a peaceful Presidency like this by believing in such diabolical rumours, simply because Mrs. Besant, who always preaches peaceful methods, has spoken a little too strongly. It would appear that some budmashes wanted to do some mischief. On the 21st morning at 2 a.m., two men, one bearing a musket and the other a lathi, were going about Mr. Arundale's bungalow. When asked why they were there, they replied that they simply came to look about. This is a curious visit. She reported the matter to the Police, and warned that gentlemen might not visit Adyar at night lest they might leave their guns behind forgetfully. This is a good warning, and the Criminal Investigation Department should note this. We pray that Lord Pentland will see that a better state of things prevails in this Presidency and that no unnecessary commotion is created in the hearts of the people.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 17th, 1916.

65. The Hindu Nesan, of the 17th July, writes:—In spite of the difference of opinion that exists regarding the advisability of India being granted swaraj immediately, the aspiration of the Indians to acquire swaraj for their country can no longer be said to be a day-dream. Though we cannot definitely assert when we can have it, there are sufficient reasons for us to be sure of having it sooner or later and to strive for it quietly and constitutionally. Apart from the agitation in India regarding the grant of swaraj to this country, there is a strong feeling even in England that this concession cannot be postponed for a long time and a regular Association called the "Home Rule for India League" has been formed there with the object of preparing the British public for the grant of Home Rule for India at an early date. The directions in which this League intends working are clearly laid down in the first hand-bill issued by it and every one, be he a Britisher or an Indian, who has been watching Indian politics, will entirely agree with the views expressed therein. The Indians are bound to feel deeply grateful to this Association for its having come forward to help them. It was only recently that Mr. G. K. Chesterton, the editor of a paper called a Voice from India published in London, was reported to have told Mr. Harendra Nath Mitra that the loyal help rendered by the Indian Princes and people to Britain in this war was sure to bind her to India by a chain of gold and that the time was not far off when India would be administered for the Indians. Mr. Chesterton is not the only Britisher who holds this opinion. His view is shared by a large section of the British public, and the Home Rule League now started in England is therefore a timely God-send. We can safely leave the work of acquiring swaraj for India in the hands of this League and avoid a serious agitation about it here in this time of war.

Swaraj for India.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 21st, 1916.

The Swadesamitran, of the 21st July, reproduces the substance of a letter of Lala Rajpat Rai to the India, in which he scoffs at the suggestion of Sir William Wedderburn and Sir Krishnagupta that a Parliamentary Committee should be appointed to enquire about the feasibility of India being granted swaraj after the war, and says that our asking for the appointment of a committee at this stage will in a way be an admission on our part that we had our own doubts about it, which is not the case and that the appointment of a committee will only lead to further delay in the consideration of this question. He adds that there are no two opinions about the fitness of India to have swaraj immediately, and is therefore of opinion that the Congress deputation, that is to proceed to England to lay before the British public the claims of India for swaraj, should be quite definite in their demands and not make unwise admissions about the competency of the Indians or otherwise, which will only serve as handles for mischief in the hands of our enemies, without benefitting us in any way.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 17th, 1916.

66. The Hindu Nesan, of the 17th July, reports the Amrita Bazaar Patrika to have written as follows:—In India anarchism can never be rooted out by despotic rule. This has been possible in no country in the world. We do not hear of Nihilism in Russia now, not because of the repressive laws of the Government but because of the feeling of patriotism, which has bound every party in the country by a close tie. After the war, the Russian Government may be run on liberal principles and this Nihilism may disappear altogether from the country. Even in India a favourable opportunity has occurred. Many

How to root out anarchism.

Indians are eager to go to the front and fight for the protection of the country. There may be a few anarchists among these. But patriotism is the best remedy for this evil trait. If the Government forms some Indian regiments, selecting men from each Province, it may appeal to the minds of the people and root out anarchism from the country. When the French Government has allowed the Indians to join the army, it does not look well that the British Government should keep them out. It will be more profitable than harmful to the Government to allow the Indians to enlist themselves in the army.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 18th, 1916.

Phenomenal progress.

67. In the course of a leader under this heading, the Hindu Nesan, of the 18th July, quotes facts and figures to show how Japan has improved her trade immensely, taking advantage of the stoppage of imports from Germany and Austria during this war, and, expressing its regret at India not being able to better herself in any way by improving her industries at this juncture, remarks "The end of this war and the end of the deliberations regarding the revival of Indian industries may, perhaps, synchronise! This is the fate of dependant countries".

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 20th, 1916.

The end of the elections.

68. The Hindu Nesan, of the 20th July, expresses its regret at Diwan Bahadur L. A. Govindaraghava Ayyar having been defeated even this time in his attempt to get the seat of the University member in the Legislative Council, and remarking that, if it reflects any discredit, it is not on Mr. Govindaraghava Ayyar but on the Indian Fellows of the Senate, appeals to His Excellency Lord Pentland to follow the example of Lord Carmichael and increase the proportion of non-official Indian members in the Legislative Council by nominating a larger number of them this time than is usual. It recommends the names of Rao Bahadur P. Kesava Pillai and Rao Bahadur P. Theyagaroya Chettiyar specially for nomination.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 21st, 1916.

The South African Indians.

69. The Andhrapatrika, of the 2 st July, says:—The South African Indians feel their condition unendurable once again. They have to obtain licenses before selling provisions anywhere in a town. It was ruled in many places that no fresh licenses would be given to Indian merchants. It is stated that where old licenses are still in force, the license holders are teased in every way. The people of South Africa enjoy in India equal rights with the British while they annoy the Indians in South Africa. May the English statesmen consider if this is a desirable state of things in the British Empire! Where is the principle of reciprocity advocated by Lord Hardinge?

SASILEKHA, Madras, July 21st, 1916.

The Americans and the coloured races.

70. The Sasilekha, of the 21st July, says:—While the Europeans and the Americans come to India and live happily, Indians are not allowed to work and live happily in the Colonies and other places. The Negroes in America are subjected to great disabilities by the white men there and are treated like brutes. Governors and Judges do not interfere on behalf of the Negroes even in cases in which they are handled brutally by the Americans. It is to be regretted that though the Americans are more advanced than the Europeans in every respect, they are iniquitous in their treatment of the coloured races.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 21st, 1916.

Japanese trade.

71. The Andhrapatrika, of the 21st July, says:—Our industrial situation is such that we have to depend upon Japan for articles of everyday use, however inferior they may be. Will not our Government be moved by pity at least now? Is it proper on their part not to have as yet realised that the industrial salvation of India cannot be attained unless the Government arrange for industrial education and research and for protective tariff? Foreign trade is depriving the people of this country of their bread and life blood, and it is the duty of the Government to prevent it.

72. Referring to the charge of sedition brought against Mr. Tilak, the Andhrapatrika, of the 24th July, remarks:—From this it will be clear that the Government officers in Bombay wish to adopt repressive measures and silence the tongues of the agitators for Home Rule. Lord Willingdon was liberal hearted during the time of Lord Hardinge, and Lord Chelmsford has promised to follow Lord Hardinge's policy. Under such circumstances, we cannot easily bring ourselves to believe today's news about Mr. Tilak. We should regret if Lord Chelmsford's policy is not a continuation of that of Lord Hardinge.

Mr. Tilak.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

73. The Andhrapatrika, of the 24th July, says: Mr. Asquith said the other day that the officers appointed to enquire into the war operations in Mesopotamia and the Dardanelles shall include the representatives of the Houses of Parliament and the Australian representatives. Our armies also fought alongside the Australians in the Dardanelles and won equal distinction. The whole army fighting in Mesopotamia has been ours. But nobody has ever thought of India being represented at the enquiry. Is this a change in the angle of vision?

Mesopotamia enquiry.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

74. Referring to the present unrest and the murder of police officers in Bengal, the Chakravarti, of the 22nd July, writes.—In this connection, several respectable young men are arrested and punished. Still, how is it that these dastardly crimes are not decreasing? This must be attributed either to the ignorance of the police or to the reluctance of the Government to act in accordance with the opinion of the leaders of the people, or to both. Lo! the sub-editor of the Bengalee has been arrested. Who knows for what?

The failure of repressive measures in Bengal.

CHAKRAVARTI, Cochin, July 22nd, 1916.

75. As regards the extension of the village panchayat system, the Lokaprakasam, of the 24th July, says:—Of all the Collectors who were consulted by the Government in this matter, three were against the extension of this system, on the ground that justice would not be impartially dispensed with between the different communities, especially in the case of the low castes. The opinions of these Collectors cannot be accepted. To speak the truth, the majority of the people are educated and enlightened, and they are taking great interest in uplifting these low classes from their present condition. In olden days the panchayat system was working well in India. At the present time when education and civilisation are increasing among the people, there is no reason to suppose that the panchayat system will not work efficiently. The Government should not hesitate in the least to introduce this system gradually throughout the country.

Village panchayats.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, July 24th, 1916.

III.—LEGISLATION.

76. The Desabhimani, of the 16th July, says:—It is not right that the authorities who have ordered that the discussion of all controversial matters should be scrupulously avoided during the time of the war, should create confusion among people by introducing the Government of India Bill, which is of a highly controversial nature. We trust that the English Government will postpone the consideration of the Bill till after the close of the war.

The Government of India Bill.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, July 16th, 1916.

77. In the course of a leaderette under this heading, the Swadesamitran, of the 14th July, says:—We learn from Reuter that a deputation sent by the London Chamber of Commerce waited upon the Secretary of State for India on the 11th instant, and requested him to postpone the consideration of the Bill to amend the Indian Consolidation Act and to delete the second section of the Bill which refers to the right of a British subject to sue the Secretary of State for India in a court of law. We cannot have a more influential body to support our opposition to this Bill than the London Chamber of Commerce. The

A cry in the wilderness.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 14th, 1916.

British Empire itself is based on trade; and the deputation which waited on Mr. Chamberlain consisted of persons who are deeply interested in this trade. It appears that the prayer of this deputation, whose interest are adverse to those of ours, was that this Bill should not be passed into law until the opinion of the Indians was ascertained and considered. It is really regrettable that even this prayer was not heeded by the Secretary of State and he declined positively to delete the second clause of the Bill. As remarked by us already, the right of every British subject to sue the Secretary of State for India, which this clause proposes to abolish, is an ancient right enjoyed by the Indians. We cannot see what has happened now to necessitate the abolition of this right of the people. On the other hand, there are many reasons why it should not be abolished. It is stated that the decision by the Privy Council that certain Acts passed by the Legislative Councils in Burma taking away the right of appeal to a court of law by the people in the case of certain taxes has necessitated the present amendment. But it is now four years since this decision was passed and it has not caused any inconvenience to the Government till now. The same state of affairs may continue till the end of the war. Why should not then this Bill be introduced after the end of the war, after consulting all the parties concerned? Instead of doing this and satisfying the Indians and Anglo-Indians alike, the Secretary of State for India has tried to appease the Anglo-Indians alone by saying that this provision was introduced only to repair the injustice done to Mr. Momant, a merchant in Burma, by that Government. He has not thought it necessary to satisfy the Indians. The Englishmen have often expressed their admiration of our loyalty and their gratitude to us for the help we have rendered. They have stated often that Indian affairs would hereafter be viewed in a liberal spirit and that we would not be mistaken in expecting to have swaraj on Colonial lines granted as when the very constitution of the British Empire is changed after the war. All the same, when the people of this country unanimously demand that a certain obnoxious measure should not be introduced, the officials decline to grant their request. As long as the Legislative Councils in this country are not constituted on a popular basis, and as long as the executive officials continue to exercise their powers without any reference to public opinion, we are afraid there is no possibility of our avoiding such mishaps.

PRAPAN CHAMITRAN, Madras, July 14th, 1916.

The Prapanchamitran, of the 14th July, also takes exception to the provisions of this Bill, and expresses the hope that the Secretary of State for India will take into consideration the fact that it is opposed by every one in India and that the Indians, who are directly affected by it, have not been heard about it, and withdraw it immediately.

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore, July 26th, 1916.

78. The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 26th July, in an article congratulating the non-official members of the Legislative Council on their intelligent participation in the budget debate, proceeds to remark that the Financial Secretary, Diwan Bahadur Chakravarthy, with his long and eloquent speech on the budget for the year and the praise it evoked from the lips of the Diwan, silenced the grumbling among the members about the increase of his pay to the round figure of Rs. 2,000 per mensem and succeeded in creating the impression that he probably deserved even more. The paper, next alluding to the Diwan's reference to the amount of thought bestowed on the University scheme, remarks that it is surprising that, despite the advice of those who, after a careful study of the actual working of all the universities in the more advanced countries of the world, suggested the establishment of a technological university on modern lines, the Diwan should still adhere to the view that the B.A., M.A., B. SC., M.SC., and B.T. examinations represent all that is most conducive to the progress of the State. The money that is to be expended on the present university, would, the paper adds, be sufficient in our opinion for a technological university on a modest scale, but the people cannot help bowing their heads to the Diwan's words which imply that one must not look a gift horse in the mouth.

The Mysore Legislative Council.

The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 26th July, referring to the complaints from the non-official members of the Council regarding the recent creation of many new appointments and the increase of the salaries of the higher officials of the State by granting them numerous kinds of allowances, while the grievances of the ill-paid Amildars, Sub-Registrars were wholly ignored, observes :—The Diwan upheld the policy of incurring increased expenditure in regard to the higher officers of Government by observing that no progress would be possible unless there were capable and well-paid officers to suggest the lines on which we should proceed. While praising the vigour with which the members criticised the budget, the Diwan at the same time accused some of the members of taking part in the debate from a mere love of opposition without studying the details of the subject. Although the Diwan thus both praised and condemned these members with the same breath, we must observe that the people feel deeply indebted to their representatives for the energy and earnestness with which they conducted the debate, which would have been rendered still more brilliant and successful if only the Government had not seemed so self-sufficient.

Vokkaligara Patrike, Bangalore, July 26th, 1916.

The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 22nd July, also contains a lengthy article resenting the Diwan's remarks regarding the narrow-mindedness of some of the members of the Council in the course of the budget debate.

Sampad Abhyudaya. Mysore, July 22nd, 1916.

79. The Bharati, of the 21st July, complains that the Canarese-speaking people who had been entertaining high hopes that their language will obtain immense fresh opportunities of development under the Mysore University Scheme have been totally disappointed by the decision to attach to it no greater importance than is given to the other vernaculars. The paper remarks that the Mysore University Scheme is for the most part a copy of the Madras University and that it is deplorable that although the vernacular of the entire province is Canarese, Mysore with a separate University of its own, has not given any special encouragement to the development of its mother tongue.

Canarese and the Mysore University scheme.

Bharati, Bellary, July 21st, 1916.

80. The Vrittanta Patrike, of the 27th July, writes :—The annual report on the Mysore revenue administration does not disclose a very satisfactory state of things. There has been abnormal delay in the disposal of darkhast applications. A number of applications have been pending for over two years. The Deputy Commissioners have done very little travelling and inspection in the rural parts. They complain that their desk work itself is too heavy. The Sub-divisional officers too have been negligent in respect of travelling and inspection. The Revenue Commissioner's circuit did not extend to more than six weeks in the whole year. Year after year the Government pass numerous criticisms about this neglect on the part of the officers and it is not possible to say whether their censures have succeeded in effecting any improvement, and yet Government have not been known to punish or dismiss any of its officers for such neglect. We are inclined to think that the Revenue Commissioner is burdened with too many duties. In addition to matters connected with revenue proper he has been entrusted with control over mines, industries, trade, agricultural examinations, the muzrai department, hospitals, schools, etc. There is a separate officer for each of these departments, and these submit their own reports every year. Under these circumstances we are left to wonder why the Revenue Commissioner should trouble himself with the working of all these departments. Further, the Government is organising an additional department but no pains have been taken to make a distinct apportionment of duties to the different departments. The administration would have been far more satisfactory if there had not been the present overlapping and duplication of functions.

The Mysore Revenue Department.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

1. New India, of the 1st August, writes:—"We are watching with some interest the way in which the police are trying to build up a case against Mrs. Annie Besant. They start with the premiss: 'Everything that happens in the way of resistance to injustice is inspired by Mrs. Besant.' The latest matter is the affray at the Fort station. New India printed, in the usual way of news, the decision of a Bombay Court, that for a railway to put up boards on third-class carriages reserving them for Europeans and Eurasians was illegal. Some one reprinted the decision on a six-inch leaflet at the India—not New India—Printing Works, and the leaflets were given away. The Madras Mail turned the leaflet into a pamphlet. Here was a chance to connect their red rag with turbulence. A rumour was spread that 50,000 were distributed. The police found the press. Alas, Mrs. Besant had had nothing to do with it. Only a rupee was paid for one poor little thousand. And the rupee was paid by another person. The person turned out to be a respectable contractor, and among the many people who employed him was Mrs. Besant. Proof positive that she instigated the affray. This kind of police work is one of the ways of getting rid of a political worker in India."

The Police and Mrs. Besant.

New India, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1916.

2. The West Coast Spectator, of the 1st August, has the following:—"An Anglo-Indian contemporary (the Madras Times) makes much of the fact that some days ago two cows—and Madrasee cows are powerful—dashed through a crowd knocking down people and loudly demands a police campaign against stray animals. The Police Commissioner will, we are sure, hear this demand, for it is an Anglo-Indian paper that makes it and the city is Madras. Here in our town how many people are daily chased by vicious cows with impunity. And how many times have we called the attention of the police to this grave nuisance without any effect? Is it because in the mofussal the police are not public servants, but public masters?"

The cattle nuisance in Calicut.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 1st, 1916.

(d) Education.

3. In a leader on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 2nd August, remarks:—"If His Excellency Lord Chelmsford would seriously take up the grievances of the Indian students in England which are forcefully conveyed to his notice by the Indian Students Friends' Society, he would, we are sure, be doing something for the permanent good of the country. Nothing sinks heavier into the Indian mind than this treatment of Indians abroad, either as young men who seek learning or as adults who seek labour and wages. The extreme poverty of the people, the undeveloped resources of the country, the absence of industrial enterprise, all serve to draw out of the land the best variety of labour it possesses. . . . . We must remember that the best education imparted by the best Indian University does not equip an Indian student sufficiently enough. He cannot enter the Indian Education Service unless after a course of instruction in England; the imperial zone of every service, Engineering or Police or Medical, is reserved for those who have had British training and are known to have imbibed the British spirit. It is, therefore, absolutely necessary that an Indian young man should have education in England if he would serve his country in any high or responsible position. . . . . The Government of India knows that; and it is its clear duty to provide educational facilities for every Indian student who goes to England. As it is, the Government of India practically denies higher education to our youths, when they would perpetuate the present conditions. . . . . What is it then that could work against Indian youths? Can it be the jealousy which shuts to the Jap, the Chinese or the Brazillian the factories in England, and which they conquer by the lure of purchasing for their respective governments machinery and stores only from such firms as admit their students for practical course? We sincerely hope that this is not so; we sincerely hope that in the eyes of the British race the Indian who now sheds his blood for the empire is dearer than the Chinese or the Brazillian. . . . . It has been acknowledged by responsible bodies who have enquired into the question, that the only effective way for securing facilities for practical training for young Indians and on which there is a general concensus of opinion, is for the Secretary of State, while purchasing stores for India, to give preference to those firms which are willing to admit Indian students to their works. . . . . England ought to be ashamed that today it should be said that, unless treated as the Japanese or the Chinese Government treat them, the English factories would not admit Indian youths."

Indian students in England.

Indian Patriot, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 3rd, 1916.

New India, of the 3rd August, writes:—"The Indian Students' Friends' Society, started some time ago in Bombay, to guard the interest of the young Indians that go for higher education to Great Britain, has, as already announced early this week, submitted a comprehensive memorial to the Viceroy requesting that the Government of India may be pleased to direct their early attention to that grave problem. . . . . The memorial emphasises the great danger of allowing matters to drift as at present. Some of our best young men go to England, and if they return discontented, the danger assumes an Imperial character. . . . . The society urges that if Indians are duly qualified by education and if they can produce reasonable credentials, no artificial barriers must be placed in their way. They should not be objected too on the ground of race. There is nothing in this demand which any impartial Englishman can justly take objection to, and India expects the Government to make that plain to the British people."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, July 29th, 1916.

4. The West Coast Spectator, of the 29th July, states:—"Some years ago, for some reason or other, which still remains a mystery, the South Indian Railway authorities opened a little canal, leading from the neighbourhood of Tellicherry Railway station to a point on the estuary of the Koduvally river. This canal quickly became a source of loss and nuisance to cultivators holding lands on its banks, for, at every high tide salt water rushed in damaging cultivation and to some extent, rendering cultivation useless. The Railway authorities, thereupon, put up a sort of a dam, but this coliapsed before long and since then neighbouring inhabitants used to get together and throw up a dam periodically at their own cost.

The Revenue authorities and a canal in Tellicherry.

"It would now appear that the Revenue authorities have issued orders for the removal of the dam, the people being informed that no daming will hereafter be permitted. The result of the prohibition will be that it will greatly reduce the area under rice cultivation in the locality within the influence of the canal, and, of course, reduced acreage will also mean reduced land revenue. The Revenue authorities are a wonderfully sapient lot, but it is at times hopelessly beyond the intelligence of the ordinary mortal to fathom the depths of revenue wisdom. The present is an instance in point. It can only be hoped that, in this case the wisdom will admit of being improved upon beneficially to the aggrieved and distracted cultivators."

is the third-class passenger who contributes handsomely to fat dividends, and he is still treated as a veritable Yahoo by the half caste and the poor white who 'run' the railway. The case for nationalisation of railways has become irresistably strong which the National Congress should not fail to take up the forthcoming session. There will be no relief and no compensating advantages to the general tax-payer, who is called upon to pay for rolling stock and subsidies, unless and until the railways become his property, not in name, but in practice as well."

Sir Thomas Holland in Madras.

6. The Hindu, of the 31st July, writes:—"We publish elsewhere the report of an interesting speech which Sir Thomas Holland made at a conference which he had with the members of the Southern India Chamber of Commerce. The observations which Sir Thomas made in the course of that speech were doubtless of a general nature and did not go very deep into the problem, but so far as they went they were characterised by an amount of sympathy and discernment which we look for vainly in the utterances and writings of those who are entrusted with the development of industries in this country. . . . . We have pointed out in these columns how the success of Indian artisans and mechanics in the various railway workshops of the country proved the potentialities of India to supply skilled labour, and we are glad to find that Sir Thomas Holland has clearly recognised this fact. . . . . Again, we have often been taunted with the statement that we are an essentially agricultural people and that we cannot successfully achieve any progress in the development of industries. The just observations of Sir Thomas give the lie direct to this unfounded accusation. Sir Thomas in effect says that we have all the requisites for making us industrially successful excepting such things as capital and scientific knowledge which would be best available through Government encouragement. As Sir Thomas observes, we have all the raw materials necessary and the right kind of labour to work them, and in his opinion all that we have to do is to draw out the capital that is lying idle in India. . . . . So far as the above observations of his go, Sir Thomas Holland was treading on firm ground. It is when he comes to the fiscal question and the programme of the Commission that his ideas are a little clouded. The comparison by Sir Thomas of protection with medicine appears to us to be altogether unhappy. 'If you can keep up your health by eating good food, why,' asked Sir Thomas, 'should you take medicine?' Our complaint is that our industries are not suffering from ill-health, but that they are either destined to compulsory barrenness and stagnation or are decimated in their infancy. We want protection against such havoc, and we are glad that though Sir Thomas is not greatly enamoured of protection, he would not object to our using the tariff judiciously whenever we find it necessary. We may point out that Sir Thomas is mistaken in supposing that everyone in India is talking of protection as being the one path for the salvation of India. What India urges is that protection is one of the few essential paths leading to industrial success, and to this dictum we do not see Sir Thomas has anything to oppose. . . . . We congratulate the President of the Industries Commission on his speech which, if our interpretation of it is correct, breathes an air of liberality, and hope that he will be able to do something tangible towards the cause which he has so enthusiastically undertaken to promote."

A. O. Hume.

7. New India, of the 31st July, observes:—"Of the very few Britons who have rendered Great Britain unique service by their sympathy towards Indians, the name of Allan Octavian Hume occupies a proud place in the front. If, after the kind of British rule which lasted for 150 years, we have had in this country, with full measure of promises raising hope, and consistent breaking of them engendering disappointment and despair; if after that Indians, especially the educated classes, still believe in and trust the British nation, and are willing and ready to sacrifice life and property for the good of the empire, it is mainly due to the noble examples and splendid work of such men as A. O. Hume. . . . . Our people have had such rude shocks, the behaviour of the majority of our administrators was so far from our ideals of the true British spirit, that without a Hume, a Wedderburn, a Henry Cotton, a William Digby, we would have most probably completely gone off the track of law-abiding, constitutional ways, and would have taken to expressions begotten of uttermost hopelessness and despair. . . . . We are living in times and in the midst of repression which may shake our faith in the British people. Let us not forget—we know and feel it is hard to remember—that Hume was a Briton, that there are others like him to-day, and for the sake of one such man, a dozen of hard-headed bureaucrats may be forgiven."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 31st, 1916.

Bal Gangadhar Tilak.

8. The Hindu, of the 31st July, states:—"It was quite recently announced that Mr. Bal Gangadhar Tilak intended to proceed to England shortly with his legal advisers in connection with his defamation suit against Sir Valentine Chirol. . . . . The news that a passport has been definitely refused will be received with considerable surprise. No reasons have been stated for this refusal, and the public are left to speculate on the grounds which have induced the authorities to take a step which will shock the whole country. Whatever may be the reason for this most unfortunate procedure, its consequences on Mr. Tilak are not difficult to conjecture. The case is an important one and has been instituted against a person who has levelled serious charges against a distinguished Indian. The right to call to account in a Court of Law a person who is believed to have wronged another is one of the most elementary and fundamental rights and any act which tends to deprive him of that inherent right is one which should be abhorrent to the moral sense of every right-thinking person."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 31st, 1916.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 31st July, says:—"Elsewhere we reprint from Leader its straightforward remarks about the refusal of a passport to Mr. Tilak, who wants to go to England to prosecute his case against the friend of the bureaucrats—Sir Valentine Chirol. The Bombay Government have taken legal action against Mr. Tilak with a view to his preserving the peace. We do not see how Mr. Tilak can carry out their wish better than by going out of the country and attending to his business of trying to bring to justice a man who had written against Mr. Tilak, when the latter was unable to reply. . . . . If the Bombay Government fear that Mr. Tilak is spreading sedition here—and we are bound to suppose that they feel that fear, since they have called on him to show cause why he should not give security against such action—what should rejoice them more than that he should go to England, and so be incapacitated from such spreading? He may not go to England and be free. He may not remain in his native country and be free. There is no Colony he can take refuge in and be free. Is there any spot on God's earth where an honest Indian can be free?"

WEST COAST REFORMER, Calicut, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

The West Coast Reformer, of the 2nd August, remarks:—"More amazing than the criminal proceedings taken against Mr. Tilak is the reported refusal to grant a passport to him to proceed to England in connection with the case of defamation which he has instituted against Sir Valentine Chirol. . . . . The prohibition of Mr. Tilak's voyage is, perhaps, intended to prevent the possibility of his undertaking any political work in England during his stay there. But the action of the authorities cuts in two ways, and this ought not to have been done. No mystery should shroud the actions of Government if they should carry the sympathies of the people."

NEW INDIA, Madras, July 31st, 1916.

"The Local Governments as Home Rulers."

9. The following appears in New India of the 31st July:—"The Local Governments are certainly carrying on a very vigorous Home Rule propaganda, and its activity increases rather than diminishes. We gratefully acknowledge the yeoman's help they are giving us, but feel compelled gently to remonstrate with them on their methods. Our propaganda is a peaceful and constructive one, but the Government methods are destructive, and, being violent and pain-giving, they spread unrest and anxiety.

"Mr. Arundale, so well known and so beloved in the United Provinces for his many years of self-sacrificing and devoted educational work; who has given back to the empire by his loving wisdom youths whom the bureaucratic methods had driven into conspiracy; who had made England fair in the eyes of lads who had learned hatred for her outside the school and college; this good and gentle Englishman, who has come to his old home for a few months after devoted war service as Commandant of a military hospital in England—this same Mr. Arundale has been chased by the Criminal Investigation Department in Allahabad wherever he went. . . . . What does the Government of the United Provinces hope to gain by these clumsy and irritating tactics? They are certainly creating Home Rulers out of many people who were indifferent to politics, because people like to live at peace and in security, and they are being harried into the desire for Home Rule, merely because they wish to lead a quiet life. There are thousands of Mr. Arundale's old pupils in the United Provinces and scattered over India. They will become Home Rulers to a man, when they see the beloved and reverenced Principal of their younger days hunted by the police as if he were a criminal. . . . . The cowards who have been terrified or bribed into submission, they sink into the well-merited bottomless pit of contemptuous oblivion; but those who resolutely oppose tyranny, who refuse either to be terrorised into silence or to be driven by despair into conspiracy, those shall shine on India's grateful breast as Kaustubha, tossed up by the churning of the ocean, shines on the breast of Vishnu. Their light affliction, which is but for a moment, shall win for them an eternal weight of glory."

10. New India, of the 1st August, has the following:—"We earnestly hope that the memorial of 50,000 Musalmans for the release of their religious leader, Moulana Abul Kalam Azad, exiled from Bengal under the Offence Act, will be granted. The exclusion from certain areas of men deemed sacred by their followers is ever dangerous in India, and the vague charge of 'prejudicial to the public safety' carries no weight with the people. The Moulana is excluded from the scene of his ministrations, and his disciples clamour for his return. Perhaps Lord Carmichael, not being Lord Willingdon, may allow him to return."

Moulana Abul Kalam Azad.

NEW INDIA, Madras, August 1st, 1916.

11. In a leader referring to Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji's reply to a letter in 1905 regarding the yearly drain of £30 millions from India in the Daily Mail, New India, of the 1st August, says:—"If England were 'England in India' and not 'Anglo-India,' how happy, how prosperous, how safe, would both countries be; but to say this is 'to be very near sedition,' if not over the border, as sedition is understood in the Anglo-Indian papers, which scold and shout the Local Governments into obedience to their behests, even in spite of their own better judgments. For the Governors, being Englishmen only a few years out of England, are more English in spirit than their Councillors, and though seldom strong enough to hold their own against the Anglo-Indians, sometimes try to take the wheels off the chariot of autocracy, so that it drives heavily. One feels that a Scotchman like Lord Pentland, for instance, must feel qualms of conscience when he consents to attempts at stifling free opinion, remembering the Scots—perhaps some of his own ancestors—who fought against repression and died in the great struggle for civil and religious liberty against the tyranny of the Stuarts. In his boyhood he must have thrilled to their gallant stories, and the man must find it hard to forget the boy, and to act against his forbears on the side of repression and against freedom. . . . . Sir J. Shore in 1787 pointed out the evils which resulted to India, inseparable from a 'remote foreign dominion'. The heavy charges imposed upon India by the costly Europeans in the Public Services, who, Lord Curzon said, in a moment of sudden illumination and candour, 'suck from it the moisture which ought to give sustenance to the people,' are at the root of the continual drain."

Nayar recruits for the army.

12. The West Coast Spectator, of the 1st August, observes:—"They have formed a committee of Indian gentlemen in Nagpur to enlist recruits for the army. This is what we have been advocating in connection with the recruitment of Nayars for the Carnatic Infantry. Such a committee composed of leading men will certainly be able to find a large body of willing men, by reason of their local experience, and knowledge and influence. They have been complaining that recruits are coming forward but very slowly. Why not, then, try the Nagpur experiment? A Nayar is more amenable to one of his own community than to an Anglo-Indian official who knows as much Malayalam as to misunderstand it."

The Defence of India Act and Mrs. Besant.

13. New India, of the 1st August, remarks:—"We see that a Hyderabad (Sindh) merchant has just been imprisoned under the Offence Act. These arrests of merchants are extraordinary, for merchants are not a political class. It is rumoured in Madras that the Local Government have dropped the idea of the introduction of the Offence Act for the moment, thinking that they may get rid of Mrs. Besant by the cruel process adopted against Mr. Tilak. It is obvious that if there is any justification for this procedure, there is justification for a prosecution for sedition. But the disadvantage of the latter, from the standpoint of the legal advisers of the Government, is that it gives the accused person a fighting chance for self-defence, and legal points might be raised which would carry to the highest British Tribunal the question whether arguments for Home Rule are seditious. There the Government would obviously be defeated, and they would not dare to face British opinion and a British Court of Law on such a question. Hence the resort to the scandalous procedure only used against rogues and vagabonds elsewhere than in India."

NEW INDIA Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

Nominations to the Local Legislative Council.

14. New India, of the 2nd August, remarks:—"The nominations to the Local Legislative Council have been quite in keeping with the policy which has in recent times characterised the actions of our Provincial Government. Not only are the reasons prompting the selections somewhat incomprehensible, but the Government seem to have been studiously anxious to keep out the educated community. . . . . Is that the response of the Government of Madras, presided over by a liberal politician, to the growing demand of the people for greater legislative powers? Moreover, Madras has gone back, while the rest of the country is moving forwards. . . . . We are not confident that any of the nominated members will be of appreciable utility in the work of the new council. The people are fully aware of the attitude of the two who have been re-nominated—Mr. Richmond and Sir Francis Spring. They have generally been silent voters on behalf of Government, and certainly they are expected to keep up those traditions. Among the others we do not find any one that has, by his past work, given proofs of independent judgment, and that too in the direct presence of the official hierarchy Nor are we able to comprehend the motives underlying the nomination of so many members of the landed aristocracy. The regulations make ample provision for their representation. What are the recent developments that have forced the hand of the Government to increase it?"

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 3rd, 1916.

The Madras Legislative Council.

15. New India, of the 3rd August, states:—"The non-official Additional Members of the Madras Legislative Council, coming back from their constituents, have done their duty well. Mr N. Subba Rao Pantulu very nobly withdrew from the contest and left the Andhra vote to his younger comrade; all the intrigues against the President of the Servants of India Society proved to be futile, and the Hon'ble Messrs. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri and B. N. Sarma, both men of whom Madras may be proud, received 16 votes each, standing side by side at the head of the poll.

"We are particularly glad of the success of these two, for they have stood steadily against the Press Act and in favour of Home Rule. . . . . Mr. Srinivasan's outspoken addresses in favour of Home Rule were well known to have placed him on the blackest page of the Criminal Investigation Department black book, and many rumours were cleverly circulated against him—of impending arrest and the like—in order to frighten away votes. . . . . His knowledge of facts and his sanity of judgment make him invaluable in the Home Rule group. Mr. B. N. Sarma will also do us credit, and he should win his spurs in finance; he can do so, if he resolutely sets his mind to it."

HINDU, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 4th August, observes:—"The colourless speech with which Lord Pentland wound up the brief proceedings of the meeting of the Legislative Council held yesterday was symptomatic of the constitution of the Council, the nature of its general functions, as well as the amount and quality of the business which it transacted yesterday. His Excellency's speech did not contain anything which was not already matter of common knowledge, and it did not shed light on all the matters on which the public had a right to expect information and enlightenment from the head of the Government when he met the representatives of the people at a Council meeting after the lapse of several months from the date of the last meeting. . . . . So far as its touch with popular opinion is concerned, Lord Pentland's Government seems to be 'up in the clouds' whether it is located on the hills or in the plains. About some of the matters which have been agitating the public mind for months past, viz., the application of the Press Act, the apprehended operation of the provisions of the Defence of India Act, Lord Pentland had not a word to say, and the Indian public are generally left to spell out information on such matters from the impertinent effusions of Anglo-Indian journals. . . . . If the Government will not take counsel with the leaders of the people, pay no consideration to the opinions appearing in the public press and their chief officers betake themselves to the hills, political unrest is sure to breed and develop. . . . . Lord Pentland implies in his speech that there has been no lowering of the standard in the class of representatives secured to the present Council by his nominations It seems to us clear that the majority of the nominated representatives are as well-fitted to be members of a Council of Notables as they are extremely ill-equipped to discharge the duties and functions of members of the Reformed Legislative Councils."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 3rd, 1916.

16. The following appears in New India of the 3rd August:—

"Missionary legends."

"Wonderful stories are told to gaping crowds in Great Britain by returned Missionaries, in order to encourage the support of the mischievous Mission agencies in India. . . . . We wish some English folk could see the huge crowds, educated and uneducated that throng every festival. The change in the upper classes is, indeed, in the 'future'—a dim and distant future, ever retreating a mirage. The educated Indians read the daily cables from Europe, with all the ghastly details of Christian warfare. The war has done more to discredit Christian civilisation than thousands of Missionaries can do to build it up."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 3rd 1916.

17. Mrs. Annie Besant writes as follows in New India of the 3rd August:—"The Madras Mail of yesterday printed a most mischievous article, which will throw the Indian mercantile community again into the state from which they had been delivered by some carefully circulated statements 'on the highest authority,' saying that the Local Government had not applied in the past, was not applying in the present, and would not, as at present minded, apply in the future, for the extension of the Offence Act to Madras. This statement had the most tranquilising effect on the nervous mercantile community, anxious and troubled by the news of the arrest of merchants in Calcutta and Sindh under the Offence Act, and who had heard many rumours as to the probability of its 'extension to the Madras Presidency.' The 'highest authority' was diplomatic and wise in its statement, and the tense nerves of the mercantile community relaxed with a grateful sigh. . . . . It is true, as the Madras Mail says, that we all hold our personal liberty and property at the will of the executive, that is of His

The Madras Mail on the Defence of India Act.

Excellency Lord Pentland, Sir Harold Stuart, Sir Sivaswami Ayyar and Sir Alexander Cardew. There is no redress, no appeal. They are the absolute masters of all on the physical plane that makes life worth living.

"But why should the Madras Mail go out of its way thus to sound a note terrorising the whole community? People did not know these details until the persistent rumours that action against myself was contemplated under the Act forced them to enquire into the conditions under which they were living."

HINDU, Madras, Aug. 3rd, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 3rd August, says:—"A local Anglo-Indian journal has excelled itself in point of vulgarity by the remarks which it has made in last night's issue under the heading 'the Defence of India Act.' The mischievous innuendo and offensive lauguage of the following sentence with which the editorial concludes, can scarcely be misunderstood by any person of ordinary intelligence:—'The case of a pestilential individual or two can quite well be met by use of some of the powers already given by the second section of the Act and the rules, since the restriction of movement and so forth would suffice to prevent future trouble, though it might not be adequate punishment for past misdeeds.' It is triumphantly declared that the important provisions of the Defence of India Act are already in force in this Presidency, because section 1 says that the Act extends to the whole of British India, and that sections 1 and 2 shall come into operation at once. . . . . The dogmatic assertion that the essential parts of the Act are already in force in the Madras Presidency seems to us very questionable, and we have grounds for thinking that even in high official circles this view was not held. . . . . The subject of the proposed public meeting in Madras, to protest against the extension to this Presidency of the Defence of India Act, was considered at an informal gathering of some citizens, whom the Anglo-Indian journal chooses to style as 'our champions of liberty,' and 'excellent and absent-minded Hampdens,' to whom the notice sent was 'to consider what steps should be taken in regard to the application of war measures to ordinary political agitation.' . . . . . There is nothing irrational in this position, except in the fevered vision of Anglo-Indian critics. If information on important matters is withheld from popular leaders by the Government of the day, it is not the fault of the former, that they are often groping in the dark."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1916.

The Oriya representative in the Madras Legislative Council.

18. The Indian Patriot, of the 4th August, has the following:—"The Oriyas of Ganjām and Jeypore Agency must have been taken aback at the news of appointment of Sri Sobhachandra Singh of Sergada to the Madras Legislative Council. It is an irony of fate that the Oriyas in this province should be treated with such cold indifference by the Government in regard to the choice of their representative. . . . . There is no meaning in an Oriya representative, if he is not an Oriya in sympathies and aims. To have an Oriya representative, who will not safeguard the interests of the community is worse than having no representative at all. A zamindar, however intelligent and well-meaning he may be, does not generally have time and opportunity to study the problems of the people, because he lives in a sphere of his own. . . . . The Zamindar of Sergada is a young man, has given no evidence yet of any grasp of the country's affairs; he is a person who has never associated himself with any public movement. Being a zamindar he has not spent on education; he has not got even a primary school in his capital. He takes absolutely no interest in the progress of the Oriyas. . . . . He never associates himself with the educated Oriyas. He has no confidence in the Oriyas and would not employ an Oriya to his office. He has a Telugu Diwan. To crown all, in spite of the orders of the Government recognising the sole court language of Gumsur division and in spite of Oriya representations, the honourable Zamindar persists in keeping his accounts and records in Telugu, because of the Telugu agency employed in the Estate office. Such a friend, philosopher and guide of the Oriyas the Government have thought fit to nominate to guard the interests of the forsaken Oriya community!"

19. Writing under the heading "Why Europeans alone?" New India, of the 4th August, has the following:—"From extracts published elsewhere, it will be seen that the Survey Committee and the Board of Revenue ask for 'Gazetted European officials' for supervision in the Survey department. Why European? The Government have said they will consider the demand separately. For what reason? Will the children of the soil be told why some more appointments are sought to be reserved for imported people?"

Survey officers.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1916.

20. In concluding a leader headed "To-day", New India, of the 4th August, writes:—"The declaration of war of August 4th, 1914, was the declaration of Britain's place in Europe, the completion of the work of King Edward VII.

The second anniversary of Britain's declaration of war.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1916.

"That declaration also struck a new note in war. Britain entered the struggle to maintain the honour of her plighted word, to protect a little nation, shamefully assailed, to stand by France, to whom she had pledged her faith. It is true that the struggle has developed into a struggle for her own existence, but that does not touch the splendour of her gallant action at the beginning, when she flung her gage of battle into the arena, called on her daughter-nations and on India to rally to her banner, and threw her little army, so few in numbers but so strong in heroism, to hold back the mighty overwhelming hosts rushing upon Paris to end the war at a blow.

"How the Colonies answered, how India answered, all the world knows. That which touched the heart of India was that England shone out in her old historic splendour, lover of liberty, champion of freedom, the country of Hampden, of Milton, of Cromwell, of Sidney, of Burke, of Sheridan, of Gladstone. For that country's safety she sent her sons to death, she poured out gold as water. England was really England, 'the citadel of freedom' once again. England responded; East and West clasped hands. Out of the heart of war sprang peace.

"It boots not to dwell on the slow melancholy change that has passed over us since then. We know how India's generous offers were met with distrust and suspicion, her open-hearted friendship with chill politeness, waving it aside. Liberty for Belgium, for Serbia, for Poland—yes; but for India? Nay, rather increased coercion. Heavier fetters on the press; keener vigilance and more insulting espionage from the Criminal Investigation Department; more internments without evidence; more opening of letters; more stopping of telegrams. Security from papers and the killing of many; security for good behaviour—heaven save the mark!—from a harmless citizen. If the editor of New India sends a suit case to a high official by rail, a Criminal Investigation Department officer spies the address, and reports it. If she wants to send a message to the correspondent of her paper at Simla, she must send it by hand; to a friend at Bombay or at Poona—she must employ a special messenger, unless she likes her business discussed in the Madras Club. She is but one among very many, insulted by unwarrantable suspicion, their private business and money matters spied upon and made common property. All Home Rulers are similarly treated; patriotism is sedition, law-abiding political education is criminal, love for the motherland is an offence. Under such conditions is it wonderful that the mood of India has changed, that the whip of Mr. P. deWebb draws out less money than her own love outpoured, that the ice of despair gathers slowly round her heart?

"Yet, O Mother, despair not. England knows not, she does not hear of what is being done in this land so far away. The roar of the guns deafens her, and she cannot hear across their thunder the indignant protests that are filling our eastern air. But the day will come, Mother beloved, and England will break the chains her misrepresentatives have forged, and pray thy pardon for the wrongs inflicted upon thee. Be patient yet awhile, and prepare thyself for the coming dawn of liberty. Study, learn, work, and be ready to act when the war is over; in the coming reconstruction of the empire thine equal seat is sure. Thus have the high gods decreed."

III.—Legislation.

Hindu, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

The Government of India Act Amendment Bill.

21. The Hindu, of the 2nd August, writes:—"Reuter telegraphs to us today that two important clauses of the Government of India Act Amendment Bill have been dropped by the Joint Committee which was appointed to consider the measure. . . . . The Joint Committee, which consisted, among others, of able lawyers and one or two members of the House of Commons who take genuine interest in the welfare of India, deserves the best thanks of the Indian public for their having realised the grave risks to individuals and the administration alike which were involved in allowing these particular provisions to become law. . . . . It is a matter for gratification that the Joint Committee have perceived the calamitous consequences of depriving the people of India of a valuable right they have long enjoyed of seeking redress in the ordinary courts of the land against arbitrary executive acts. . . . . Now that the clauses considered to be most important and urgent by the Secretary of State has been practically withdrawn, it behoves the Government to consider whether it is worth their while to persevere in the attempt at present and whether it is not desirable to bring forward, as soon after the war as possible, a comprehensive measure dealing with numerous other anomalies in the Indian Consolidation Act."

New India, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 2nd August, says:—"So far as can be gathered from a brief cablegram published elsewhere, the two offending clauses of the Consolidation Act Amendment Bill have been omitted. . . . . The thanks of this country and the empire are due to the Select Committee of both Houses of Parliament for that wise decision. They evidently found Mr. Chamberlain too dangerous a politician to follw his lead. The main aim of the measure as amended is to permit the subjects of Indian States to serve under the British Government. To that there is little opposition in the country."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

22. The Kistnapatrika, of the 22nd July, says:—It must be admitted that the British are not as successful now on the Somme front as in the first week of their operations there. But the British do not intend to be as active now as the Germans were in the Russian theatre last year. Their only intention is to prevent the Germans from taking their army from France to another centre and to reduce the pressure at Verdun. . . . . The fear that the Germans will gain the victory has to-day been removed. We must not expect that the Germans will be at once defeated by the mere fact that the Allies have commenced the offensive. But we can surely believe that the Germans can no more act on the offensive. It remains to be seen what course their decline will take. The telegrams now received are encouraging.

The war.

Kistnapatrika, Masulipatam, July 22nd, 1916.

23. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 28th July, writes:—For the past 700 years Ireland has been fighting for Home Rule. The leaders of Ireland created much trouble during this war time. The British Government thought it more expedient in these critical times to grant their demand than face this opposition. Home Rule was decided upon in consequence. There was opposition to the question as to whether this was the proper time to grant Home Rule, and it was suggested that it may be granted at the close of the war. Others held that there was nothing to be gained by putting it off. Lord Lansdowne resigned out of disgust. His resignation has not yet been accepted. It is generally urged that the grant of Home Rule would cause no harm, but, on the other hand, it would remove discontent, promote loyalty and strengthen the empire. This seems reasonable. If India, too, should be granted Home Rule, it would certainly add to the strength of the British Rule.

Ireland and Home Rule.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, July 28th, 1916.

24. The Swadesabhimani, of the 28th July, in a leading article, giving an optimistic review of the European situation, remarks that although the wanton aggression of Germany and Austria embroiled England, despite the latter's best efforts to avert the war and although the enemy could boast of some slight successes during the first few months, recent events prove beyond doubt that the abundant resources of the Allies and the thoroughness of their equipment latterly has converted their defensive into offensive, which, if continued for some time more, must succeed in pushing back the enemy into their own territory. The paper next dwells on the huge amount of devastation caused, and thereupon observes:—In the 18th and 19th centuries Europe thought herself pre-eminent in all matters. She thought she could lead the whole world in the field of law, science and education. She believed that ethics or philosophy could be learnt only from her. She thought herself the prime fount of civilization. But looking at the havoc which this same culture has been causing during the past two years, even the eastern nations who have been deploring their own backwardness will naturally cease to envy the fruits of this civilization. As sure as there is a principle that makes for righteousness, this misdirected kultur of the Germans will meet with due punishment at the hands of the Allies, the truth of whose cause will, we have no doubt, bring them the final victory before long.

We conclude this article with an "Amen" to the prayer that will go forth from all British subjects on the second anniversary of the war for the success of the British arms.

The second anniversary of the war.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 19th, 1916.

"Mussalmans and Mussalmans."

25. The Qaumi Report, of the 19th July, writes:—When the time comes for searching the hearts of the people the hypocrites are terror-stricken, their knees begin to knock, their feet to slip and their tongues to stammer, and they are conscious of a feeling of shame. This is due to the fact of their aversion to the truth to which they are utter strangers. Many people feel their sinfulness before God and repent in secret and the generality of men do evil and commit sin all unseen by human eye. But he is a man who is perfectly natural, be he good or bad.

People take the term Mussalman to stand for a long beard and a short trousers, or they consider that to be a Mussalman merely consists of calling oneself one and paying attention to externals. Such people are deceived, while they imagine that those who only regard the outward appearance are unable to penetrate their disguise. Those men who have dyed their beards and soaked their minds have degraded themselves and the faith.

This sanguinary European war teaches us that there is no rest here for the epicurean. Those who regard worldly life as the chief object of human existence spend their days in suffering and finally sacrifice all their ambitions. But such sacrifices are not acceptable to God, and it will be said of them that they lacked purity of motive and were made under compulsion and the force of circumstances. The history of the world tells us that thousands upon thousands of Mussalmans have waged war and fought great battles. It was they who were victorious in the crusades, conquered Constantinople and fortified the walls of Spain and Grenada. The earth drank the blood of their martyrs and is able to testify that their wounded neither winced nor whined. All this was due to the fact that theirs were spiritual wars. But the present struggle in Europe is degrading to the Divine. The war-god of Europe who wears on his proud head the crown of the Cæsars and whose throne is surrounded by scientists and scholars is now being punished by his brethren. This hostility and war among Christians constitute a great object-lesson for Islam. If Mussalmans had acted like the Christians and upheld the world with both hands they would have fallen upon one another and perished.

It is now admitted that after this sanguinary war there will be none of the present comfort left in Europe. There will be a change in European foppishness and its civilization and education will assume a different garb. Mussalmans should be ready for that time which will be a testing-time for hearts and minds. Men will be induced and incited to act contrary to the code of the world. They will see religious and moral education appear in a new light and lustre and experience the delights of life and social intercourse. But we must avoid these things, for all the predictions regarding the day of reckoning are being fulfilled one after the other, and we are being convinced that the time is coming for the manifestation of the mighty power of God.

Therefore, after the war, we must all proclaim with one voice, the time for physical victory and defeat is past! arise ye people, and fight a final battle for the spirit! This is the way of your salvation. Islam stands before, come and listen:

> Come back! come back! whatever thou art,
> Cease from thy infidelity, sun-worship and idolatry.
> This court of ours is not a court of despair.
> If thou hast broken thy vows of repentance a hundred times, still come back!

MUSHIR-I-DAKHAN, Hyderabad, July 19th, 1916.

A review of the history of Hedjaz.

26. The Mushir-i-Dakhan, of the 19th July, in a leader on the marginally-noted subject, writes:—After sack of Baghdad and the overthrow of the Abbaside dynasty by Hulagu Khan, a descendent of Changiez Khan, Arab ascendency came to an end, eventually after many vicissitudes the authority of the Khalifa in Egypt was acknowledged throughout the Hedjaz. About four hundred years ago that famous scion of the House of Ottoman Suleiman led his victorious armies into Egypt, raised the Ottoman standard there and took from the Arabs the priceless gift of the Khalifate which enormously increased the might and majesty of the Turks.

Upon the Turks establishing their power in Egypt the Sharif of Mecca handed over to the Sultan the keys of the holy places and all the Arab tribes with the exception of those of the east submitted to the authority of the Ottoman ruler. After fifty years of peace the Arabs made a bid for liberty and freedom, the Sharif defeated the Turkish forces and once again raised the standard of Arab independence.

Salim II as soon as he ascended the throne tried to reconquer Arabia but in vain. The kingdom of Yemen became more and more powerful, but Wahabi inroads, the capture of Aden by the English and successive Egyptian invasions weakened it and finally the Turks advanced against it and seized the capital.

Meanwhile the power and influence of the Wahabis increased when the Sharif of Mecca in alarm, sought the aid of the Turks who with the co-operation of certain friendly tribes, sent a force of five thousand men to destroy the Wahabis, but it was obliged to return without achieving its object. Encouraged by this result the Wahabis attacked Baghdad and laid siege to holy Kerbela and spread death and destruction far and wide. Tāif, Mecca and Madīna fell one after the other and the sanguinary struggle continued for a long time during which the pilgrimage was absolutely stopped except for the followers of Wahab. This state of affairs kindled the wrath of the Muslim world against this sect and the sublime Porte sent Muhammad Ali Pasha, the Governor of Egypt, to conquer Arabia. The indefatigable exertions of this man overcame every difficulty and gradually Turkish domination over the Arab was reasserted and the influence and the might of the Turkish Khalifate re-established before the world.

Similarly whenever, in later times, the Arabs have taken advantage of the natural difficulties of their country or local political conditions, to throw off the alien yoke, the Turks have subdued and conquered them. The physical features of the country are such that no army can easily invade it, besides the Arab love of freedom and independence make him disinclined to endure for long any foreign domination. Again, no Arab State can be established in the Hedjaz strong enough to resist a foreign power. It is impossible to collect the necssary materials. The region is unfruitful; there are no mines and it is destitute of education, civilization, arts, industries and commerce. There is nothing but dreary sandy waste where neither agriculture nor industry nor trade can flourish. It was on this account that when the rule of the first four Khalifas came to an end and the simple Khalifate was changed for an imperial State with all its social and political ramifications, the capital was transferred to Syria in fulfilment of the prediction of the Prophet upon whom be blessings and peace, "The Khalifate in Madīna and the Kings in Syria."

There is no doubt the Turks have been guilty of a very serious blunder in making no attempt during these four hundred years to pacify and civilise the Arabs. Had they but taken a little trouble in this direction much good might have resulted. The fact is, the Turks themselves have made little progress in education, arts and industries as they have been engaged in war with European Powers for the last two hundred years. It is true that quite recently Sultan Abdul Hamid Khan II felt the need of these things and began to take practical steps in this direction and the first tangible result was the Hedjaz Railway. But the vicissitudes of time and the shortsightedness of the young Turks did not give this wise statesman and enlightened Sultan time to complete his plans. Had it been otherwise the Turkish Empire would not have seen this evil day.

MUSHIR-I-DAKHAN, Hyderabad, July 20th, 1916.

The Mushir-i-Dakhan, of the 20th July, in continuation of its leader on this subject in a previous issue, writes:—With all this, according to the Paisa Akhbar, although the Turks have ruled for many years over the Hedjaz they have never regarded Mecca and Madīna as conquered cities, but have held the holy places in such reverence that the Sultan has not only never subscribed or called himself the Sultan or the master of the holy places but has regarded the title of "servant of the holy places" as one to be proud of. It is this religious sentiment that has prevented the Turks from exercising their authority over Mecca and Madīna; and it is for this reason that, out of consideration for the Sharif, the slightest complaint from him against the Governor of the Hedjaz was sufficient to ensure the prompt recall of the latter functionary. For example, not long ago ten or twelve Governors were changed within the short space of two years. Such a procedure would not be adopted by any other ruling nation in the world. There is not another city on the face of the earth where the Government or the Municipality or the Governor does not levy a tax. But the Turks because of their pious belief have not levied a tax of a single piaster from Mecca or Madīna during all the centuries of their rule over those cities. On the contrary lacs, nay crores have been paid out of the Turkish exchequer for the maintenance of the holy places and payment of services rendered at the shrines.

Every year an imperial caravan conveys gifts, provisions and money for the people of Mecca and Madīna. Likewise another caravan carries grain and supplies from Egypt. These things constitute their yearly harvest, money is spent so lavishly in Mecca and Madīna that there are hundreds of "Imams" and "Muazzens" and servants who get their pay for doing nothing and probably do not attend prayers even once a year. Thousands of maunds of oil and candles are supplied. All this expenditure is met by the Turkish Exchequer and is prompted by pious belief. Every Sultan has spent money ungrudgingly on improving the buildings of the sanctuary and providing carpets and chandeliers. It is said that in the sacred enclosure at Madīna there are many gifts of gold, silver and precious gems hundreds of years of old the votive offerings of the Mussalman Kings of the world.

Even when Turks were most powerful, they left the management of the roads to the Hedjaz in the hands of the Sharif of Mecca. Hence if pilgrims were plundered or murdered by the Bedouin, the Turks did not interfere, the Sharif's administration alone dealt with these matters. The Turks have made one mistake and that is a serious one, for which they are now being severely punished, they have always treated the Arabs of the Hedjaz with indulgence and kindness. They understood not the secret of governing and ruled implicitly on these Arabs.

If pilgrims were required to pay a large amount for the hire of camels, it was the Sharif who was responsible. The Turkish Government had nothing to do with it. The Sharif summons the Bedouins every year and settles with them the rates and from the amount realized he takes a lump sum for his own treasury, a fact which is well known to the British Consul at Jedda who is also well acquainted with the hardships of which the pilgrims complain.

MUSHIR-I-DAKHAN, Hyderabad, July 22nd, 1916.

The Mushir-i-Dakhan, of the 22nd July, in continuation of its leader on this subject in the issue of the 20th instant, writes:—The foregoing account clearly shows that the attitude of the Turks towards the inhabitants of the Hedjaz has been that of the ruled and not that of the ruler. It is also admitted that the real position of the Sharif of Mecca is not that of an independent king or a tributary chief or vassal, but that of a servant, who like any other official is paid from the Sultan's Exchequer about Rs. 12,000 a month. Therefore the word "rebel" may be applied to the Sharif. The chief characteristics of the Arabs is that they will obey only their own tribal chiefs and that they are ready to sacrifice their lives at the command of their chief, be he in the right or in the wrong. The Sharif exercises authority over almost the entire region of Hedjaz and all Arab tribes regard him with respect for this reason among others that as a Saiyid he is a direct descendent of the Prophet: The present Arab revolt has not merely dealt a blow to the Ottoman Empire but to the Arabs themselves especially in the Hedjaz where, according to the first telegrams received, the Bedouin had, at the instance of the Sharif, destroyed the railway line and demolished the stations on the Hedjaz Railway for about a hundred miles from Madīna. Apparently this was done to prevent the Turks from sending reinforcements but in reality the destruction of the Hedjaz Railway will mean enormous loss. Vast sums of money were spent on the construction which took years to complete. It appears from the account of the same contemporary that during the time of peace this portion of the line was guarded day and night by sentries placed on the hill-tops on either side of the railway.

Even if the people of Hedjaz have succeeded in shaking off the Turkish yoke and in establishing their independence, obviously they will not be able to reconstruct the portion of the line they have destroyed for the simple reason that they have neither money nor men nor materials to do so. It is also true that unless railway communication is re-established between Syria, Mesopotamia, etc., there will be no progress. If for any length of time they do not get provisions by sea they will perish of hunger. In conclusion, if a kingdom is established in the Hedjaz it will require years and years of peace and tranquility under the protection of a powerful State.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, July 27th, 1916.

27. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 27th July, writes:—It is scarcely necessary to explain that, when the triple alliance and the triple entente were formed in Europe, the former consisted of Germany, Austria and Italy who solemnly agreed to help one another in the time of trouble. Similarly, the triple entente was formed between Great Britain, Russia and France on the understanding that they should help one another in case of necessity. It is as clear as noon-day how the members of the triple entente adhered to their alliance on the outbreak of the present European war. But there was a division in the triple alliance, for Italy, being fully aware that Germany and Austria were the originators of this dreadful struggle and the incendiaries responsible for this worldwide conflagration, warned them that the condition of the alliance which required mutual help only applied when the territories of one of the signatories were attacked by an outside Power. But as the present war had been begun by both of them, she would remain neutral.

Germany and Italy.

From the above facts and from those published in the daily telegrams the paper concludes that Italy will shortly declare war on Germany and observes: "The result would be to greatly strengthen existing relations between Italy and the Allies and to add considerably to the difficulties of perplexed and distracted Germany. We think the time is fast approaching when the very name of the German Empire will be blotted out from the page of existence, for her military position and financial condition are getting worse and worse every day, while the numbers of her foes are increasing. Thus, gradually, her kingdom will one day be brought to an end and finally Great Britain will be victorious."

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore City, August 2nd, 1916.

28. The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 2nd August, in its news columns, writes:—We learn that a rich man at Palghat made overtures to a poor girl for several months, and as she persisted in not yielding to his lust, she was murdered last week. The police have not arrested the culprits as yet. If such inhuman wretches are not instantly seized and meted out deterrent punishment, will it not tend to encourage such horrid crimes?

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 27th, 1916.

29. The Qaumi Report, of the 27th July, in a leading article, writes:—There is always some complaint or other with reference to interpreters in Madras, and the public are put to inconvenience in a variety of ways. No one knows why the matter is not put right or what necessity there is for perplexing Muhammadan litigants. The Persian and Urdu interpreter of the High Court died and they are still hesitating about appointing a successor. Although there are able Mussalman graduates on the establishment the advertisement

A Mussalman interpreter.

"Wanted" is still being advertised by the High Court. We do not know when and how this want is going to be supplied.

In the first place the condition that the candidate must be a graduate seems to be unnecessary, nor does there appear to be any precedent among the appointments made by the High Court. A man should be acquainted with and experienced in the work. For instance, although the late Munshi Meyan Jan Sahib was not a graduate, yet the efficient manner in which he discharged his duties requires no proof to-day. There are many people in the country who are not graduates but who are good interpreters. We do not wish to press the point, but there is already employed in the High Court a young Muhammadan graduate about whose ability there is no doubt. This capable man has frequently given proof of his ability and linguistic capacity, and it is inconceivable why his claims, established by his service and knowledge of the work, are being overlooked. It is also astounding to find no Muhammadan Interpreter in any of the four Magistrate Courts including that of the Chief Presidency Magistrate.

Hindus are doing the work of Hindustani interpreters, but Mussalman litigants are distracted and they have no confidence in this non-Muslim Urdu which really should be called Tamil-Urdu. This is a queer case! On the one hand, the High Court attaches so much importance to the office of interpreter that it is looking for a graduate. On the other, a subordinate court considers it such an easy thing that it entrusts the work of Urdu translation to Hindus! It would not be surprising if the High Court were to appoint a Hindu Persian and Urdu Interpreter simply because he happens to be a graduate!

We hope these grievances will very soon be removed. It is possible that the Judge and the Magistrates in their wisdom and learning will refuse to be misled by defective interpretation, but this will not satisfy litigants. They feel the need most acutely and their dissatisfaction is well founded. Our demand that the appointment of Interpreters should be made forthwith, and that the proceedings of courts of justice should be entirely free from all doubt and ambiguity is certainly not out of place.

(d) Education.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 19th, 1916.

Education in India.

30. In its leader on the subject of education, the Desamata, of the 19th July, says:—The Anglo-Indians say that the Indians are given more education than they require at present. From the very beginning they have been standing in the way of India's progress, and spurning national ideals. America has in 18 years done in the Philippine Islands what England has not been able to do in 150 years in India in the matter of education. While the people in England now demand a thorough change in the system of education obtaining there, it is no matter for surprise that the Indians clamour for a similar change in the system followed here, which is not only inferior, but also tends to undermine the health of boys. We pray that a committee may be appointed to enquire into the causes that have contributed to make the present system of education in India unsuccessful.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 26th, 1916.

The recent meeting of the Senate.

31. In the course of its comments on the recent meeting of the Senate of the University of Madras, the Desamata, of the 26th July, says:—The present Indian Universities are so many machines manufacturing quill-drivers for Government service like the depots sending coolies to Natal. From an examination of the results of the late Intermediate examination in Madras, it will be evident that the University is not mindful of the welfare of students. The official element being predominant in the University, no regard is paid to the voice of the people. It is hoped that the proposed increase in the strength of the Syndicate will improve matters to some extent.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 22nd, 1916.

English education.

32. The Kistnapatrika, of the 22nd July, says:—Properly speaking the rulers should learn the vernaculars spoken by the ruled. But the rulers of India found it difficult to carry on the administration as they pleased while acquiring the vernaculars. So they required the people to learn their own language and established English schools. This was a boon to the people whose industries had by that time declined and who had been poverty-stricken. . . . . But these institutions have all along been supplying clerks and subordinate officers to the various departments of the Government. In the earlier times, there was a large demand for such men and so the percentage of passes was high, and now that the demand has fallen, the Universities have turned out to be slaughter houses.

33. The Andhrapatrika, of the 31st July, protests against the order of the Calcutta University requiring students to live within the hostels founded by it away from their relatives, and remarks that the order is a great hardship to students who are too poor to meet the hostel rates.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 31st, 1916.

The Calcutta University.

34. In its leader on the Andhra National College, the Kistnapatrika, of the 22nd July, has the following:—The anniversary of this college came off with great eclat on Wednesday last with the Hon'ble Sir Sivaswami Ayyar as the president. . . . . If any Educational officers listened to the report read by the Principal, they would clearly understand what great efforts should be further made before they could translate their ideals into actual facts. Educational methods in this country have, for the last fifty years, followed a beaten track, and prevented the educated from striking out new paths. The educationists are confronted with many educational problems such as carrying on education through the medium of the vernaculars, coupling technical education with literary education and so on. Sir Sivaswami Ayyar is the Vice-Chancellor of the Madras University. . . . . He has not been, to any considerable extent, influenced by the new spirit that has been agitating the hearts of the educated for the last ten years. Though a talented person, he lacks the keenness of insight that is required to grapple with the new problems of the day, the enterprise to strike out new paths, and the imagination to perceive the ideals lying concealed in the womb of the future.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 22nd, 1916.

The Andhra National College.

Ever since the breeze of new spirit began to stir, ever since nationalism stood revealed to the mental eyes of the sons of this land, and ever since, by a conflict of the cultures indigenous and alien, a spirit of reconciliation dawned, some educated men have been thrown into a sort of confusion. They have a sort of suspicion, fear and aversion towards the national movement. They have no faith in the continuity of a national tradition for each country. They have little confidence in the fact that the people of a country can construct their future by self-endeavour. . . . . They are of opinion that India is now more exalted than she ever had been. The Hon'ble Sir Sivaswami Ayyar is one of these. . . . . But the new spirit that now moves new India is irresistible, and even Sir Sivaswami Ayyar could not help accepting, in some measure, the ideals of national education. With his heart in a flurry, he had yet to bow his head before the pedestal of national education. The sound of the message that fell from the lips of Mr. K. Hanumanta Rao Pantulu, and the sight of the National College that has sprung out of the self-consciousness of the votaries of the nationalistic creed and the self-sacrifice of the Andhras could wring homage from even Sir Sivaswami Ayyar to the rule of the national movement. Mr. M. (G?) Ranga Rao, who delivered a lecture on "National education," gave a very interesting description of the new life that has been flowing through the hearts of the Andhras, and very ably established by sound arguments the reasonableness and need of the nationalistic cause. From all these events we cannot help recognising that the supreme sway, the extensive dominion, and the divine dispensation of the national movement, are gradually gaining their way into the hearts of the people of this country. It is no easy task to establish a system of national education in the existing circumstances. For its development and spread, the environment must be favourably readjusted. . . . . If all this were accomplished, how could the slaughter of the School Final and Intermediate students ever occur? Why would the young and old bewail it as a terrible calamity? What need would there be for even the sons of rich landlords who are above the scramble for wealth to be seen weeping at the college gates? How could penal provisions such as leaving certificates and progress certificates prey on our youths? How long can the earth groan under "the educated classes," who are traitors to their country, who, having lavished their money and impaired their bodies, are unable to add to the wealth of their country, who, having lost their self-respect and self-esteem, are natives only in flesh and blood but are aliens in minds and heart, and who, falling a prey to the commotion that agitates their society and to the struggle for life that besets them, are lost to this world and to the other. . . . . It is national colleges that give shape to the national movement, help in the social government of the nation, strengthen national respect, and are a means for the attainment of liberty.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 1st, 1916.

The School Final examination.

35. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 1st August, writes:—In discussing the reasons for the heavy failures in the Intermediate examination of the Madras University, it was pointed out that the failures were due to the fact that School Final students who were below the standard were freely admitted into the college classes. A committee has no doubt been appointed to enquire into the causes of these heavy failures and some fresh light might be thrown on the situation; but nothing has been done to redress the grievance of the students who have failed. If students below the standard were admitted to the college classes, who is to blame for it? Why was the School Final system introduced? Why should it not be abandoned now at least? Why should not the old system of Matriculation be reverted to? Since the inauguration of the School Final system, have the teachers any time left for teaching work, after attending to the numerous other duties assigned to them, such as holding examinations, entering marks and maintaining records? Has not the new system reduced the teachers of high schools to the level of clerks? It is very much to be regretted that the Madras University should remain blind to this fact.

MALAYALI, Quilon, June 29th, 1916.

The extraordinary meeting of the Senate.

36. The Malayali, of the 29th July, regrets that the extraordinary meeting of the Senate, which was convened for the purpose of affording some relief to those who failed in the recent Intermediate Examination, should have ended in a fiasco, without settling that question. It takes strong exception to Rev. Mr. Macphail's rash remarks at the meeting, expresses surprise that the Vice-Chancellor did not stop him at once, and hopes that another meeting would be convened to consider and settle the case of the unfortunate students.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 29th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Kerala Patrika, of the 29th July, condemns the present system of education and the manner in which examinations are conducted, doubts if the appointment of the committee will be productive of any good results, and observes that increasing the number of years for the courses of studies, and throwing obstacles in the way of passing examinations, cannot be conducive to the welfare of the people.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Aug. 1st, 1916.

The extraordinary meeting of the Senate.

While rejoicing at the decision of the Senate to increase the number of Syndicate members, which, it is hoped, will tend to diminish the influence of the Madras Professors in the affairs of the University, to hold two Law examinations instead of one, and to defer the question of curtailing the B.L. course by one year to the Faculty of Law for report, the Keralodayam, of the 1st August, regrets that some of the European Fellows should have used insulting language when talking of the Intermediate students, for which the Vice-Chancellor ought to have called them to order, and that the meeting should have dissolved without arriving at a decision in respect of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Seshagiri Ayyar's resolution, and says:—We think that the obstinacy and the irrelevent utterances of some of the Fellows must have led the Vice-Chancellor to dissolve the meeting after the acceptance by the Senate of the resolution moved by Mr. Moffat without any previous intimation thereof. But the results of the dissolution of the meeting are very deplorable. The tricks of the enemies of the students have met with success, the people's representatives have been silenced for the time being, and the poor students who failed in the last Intermediate examination have been disappointed. It has also been clearly demonstrated that nothing can be achieved so long as the European element in the Senate preponderates, and it is needless for us to point out what the duty, the bounden duty, of the Indian members in the Senate is.

(e) Local and Municipal.

Dust in the Madras streets.

37. The Andhraprakasika, of the 26th July, says:—The attention of the Madras Corporation has more than once been drawn to the great inconvenience caused by dust in the Madras streets, and it was also suggested to them that they might systematically water the streets by means of tube wells as in Calcutta. But the Corporation have not taken any action. We hope that the Government at least will arrange for thus watering the streets and free Madras from the dust nuisance.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, July 26th, 1916.

(h) Railways.

The Railway Conference.

38. In commenting on the proceedings of the Railway Conference, the Andhrapatrika, of the 27th July, says:—It was stated that we could not purchase railway materials in America, because that would hamper the policy of Imperial finance and disturb exchange. We, of course, do not wish to have things made in America. But when we have to import the required railway materials from foreign countries, it will be most advantageous to purchase them from the cheapest market. The supply of railway materials from England being limited by the principle that it should not interfere with the manufacture of war materials, the English manufacturers will naturally raise the prices of railway materials, and it will not be just to purchase them from England and fill the coffers of a few English merchants with the money of the people here, unless that is unavoidable.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 27th, 1916.

Eurasians and Europeans.

39. Referring to the recent affray at the Fort station between some Eurasians and some Indian students, the Andhrapatrika, of the 27th July, says:—The Mail sought to justify the practice of reserving compartments in trains for Eurasians and Europeans on the ground that their social conditions differed from those of the rest of the people. This is a meaningless contention. Is such a difference observed in the first- and second-class carriages? The Eurasians think they are entitled to special privileges and hence the brawl at the Fort station. They are encouraged in entertaining this impression by the special favour with which they are regarded by the Railway authorities. This partiality on the part of the authorities is not only unjust but is also a source of riots. It is highly objectionable to continue the practice of reserving compartments for any class of people even after a Court of Law has declared it illegal.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 27th, 1916.

A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 28th July, says:—If those who dealt blows to boys at the Fort station are men of the savage aboriginal classes, they may be excused. But they are white men and men who are intelligent and civilised. It is rumoured that one of the boys died. It is not known how far the rumour is true. It is said that it was wrong to have printed and distributed leaflets, and that the boys were to blame for entering reserved compartments. It may, perhaps, be decided finally that in breaking the skulls of schoolboys, the Eurasians did a lawful thing.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 28th, 1916.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 1st August, remarks that it is not right on the part of the Railway authorities to perpetuate the practice of reserving compartments to certain classes of people in the face of the fact that it was declared illegal by the Bombay High Court, and hopes that they will soon discontinue it.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1916.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 3rd, 1916.

40. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 3rd August, writes:—The question has been raised as to why the railways should not provide reserved accommodation for the various Indian communities which do not mix with other classes. Petitions are being drafted urging that pilgrims and the higher classes should have separate compartments reserved for their comfort. Quarrels are now becoming frequent about the compartments reserved for Europeans. When these compartments are empty, Indians go and occupy them, and the Europeans who subsequently enter find it difficult to oust them. It is wrong to keep such reserve compartments. If one community is allowed the privilege the others too naturally desire it. It would not be wrong under the circumstances, if the people of the higher castes also demand it. It is stated that, as the Indians do not like to travel along with Europeans, separate compartments have been provided for the latter. If the railways should adhere to this principle and provide separate compartments for all those communities with whom the Indians do not like to travel, that course would be equally welcome to the public. It is to be hoped that the Railway Boards will give due attention to the matter.

Special accommodation for Europeans.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA. Mysore, Aug. 3rd, 1916.

The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 3rd August, in its news columns writes on the same subject:—The Madras Mail reports that an altercation took place between some European school boys and Indian school boys at the Fort station, Madras, in which some of the Indian students received injuries. The injured Indian students seem to have been sent to the hospital for treatment. Every Indian should learn to fight out a just quarrel. No art is more helpful to our national advancement than the art of fighting for justice. Without it, the country will never gain the object of her desire.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

41. The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 2nd August, writes:—The Indian railway passenger has numerous hardships to suffer: the herding of passengers into compartments, like sheep, regardless of the rule not to force in more than a prescribed number; the huddling of passengers into goods waggons at the time of fairs and festivals; the insulting attitude of black men wearing hats and posing themselves as superior even to Europeans; the absence of separate ticket offices for women at the bigger stations; and the reservation of separate compartments for Europeans and Eurasians. Every one of these hardships wounds the feelings of the Indians. The railway servants are rude even to respectable passengers. But the worst of all indignities is that respectable Indians travelling by the first and second class are forced to quit their compartment when a Sahib with a topee comes to enter it. A big topee-walla considers it beneath his dignity to travel with a respectable Indian! Even the poor Dorais travelling by the third class have separate accommodation! If any Indian enters these compartments he is instantly necked out. The Dorai may be drinking and eating, stinking, raging and behaving worse than a beast and yet even a quiet saintly Indian must not travel with him! He is looked upon as a pariah! It is most heartrending that the Railway authorities, who depend on us for their living, should subject the Indian passengers to such indignities. Is there none to remedy this state of things? It is most surprising that this autocracy of the railways should remain unchecked. No one comes to the aid of the poor travellers. The railway servants do not seem to mind the censure of the law courts. Unless the Government make some express statutory provision to remedy this state of things, these hardships will never disappear. But the trouble is that we cannot easily get the Government to notice these grievances.

The grievances of railway passengers.

The paper next refers to a decision of a Bombay Court holding it illegal to hang up boards stating "Reserved for Europeans", and says that the people who recently sought to disregard such restrictions have been dealt with in a most insolent and high-handed manner by the railway servants. The paper thereupon remarks that under these circumstances it behoves the Government to express their view of the matter and to put an end to these irritating situations by stating what course the railway servants and the public shall respectively adopt.

The paper finally remarks that it may be hoped that in the newly-organised railway department of Mysore the Government will take care not to give room for grievances of this kind.

(k) General.

42. With reference to the remark of the London Times that the Government of Greece does not allow the publication of news unfavourable to them, the Desamata, of the 19th July, reproduces the following observations from New India :— In the matter of telegrams, our Government here go much further. In this respect Reuter is a great sinner. He does so to adapt himself to the opinions of the authorities. His agency is thus dangerous to the empire and injurious to the welfare of the people.

Telegraphic news.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 19th, 1916.

43. In the course of its article on Mrs. Besant and the Bombay Government, the Desamata, of the 19th July, remarks: —It may be doubted whether her presence in the Bombay Presidency may endanger public safety, but the order of the Bombay Government has irritated the people so much that public peace may be endangered. Their action betrays more of short-sightedness than of statesmanship.

Mrs. Besant.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 19th, 1916.

The Andhrachandrika, of the 27th July, says :—The writings and speeches of Mrs. Besant are rather harsh and uncivil. In the beginning we entertained the idea that New India will do much good both to India and England. We are now gradually giving up that hope. It is wrong that we should now encourage her. The Government are right in discouraging her. We are glad that she wants swaraj for India, but we disapprove of her methods. It is, of course, plain that she is not influenced by any bad motives. We suggest that the Government will do well to excuse her. But it is a pity that she takes nobody's advice. We more than once submitted that it will be expedient for New India to change its methods at once.

ANDHRACHANDRIKA, Proddatur, July 27th, 1916.

Referring to the reply of the Bombay Government to the communication of Mrs. Besant requesting them to state the reasons for enforcing the Defence of India Act against her, the Andhrapatrika, of the 28th July, says :—To refuse to state the reasons for restraining one's freedom is highly unfair. Had the Government cancelled the order against Mrs. Besant, nobody would be particular to know from them on what grounds the order was passed. It is necessary that they should publish the kind of offence of which Mrs. Besant is guilty so that others may avoid committing the same. If without doing so, they pass one repressive order after another, they will surely give room for the inference that the individual punished is not at fault, but that the authorities behaved arbitrarily towards him out of spite. The individual who thus suffers without reason will all the more enlist the sympathy of the people. It is to be regretted that the rulers of so great a country as India have failed to see this. It is a surprise that Lord Chelmsford has not as yet interfered.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 28th, 1916.

44. In its issue of the 1st August, the Bombay correspondent of the Keralodayam writes as follows :—It is not known why that lady Mrs. Besant who is a jewel amongst women, and who, with a singleness of purpose, has been devoting day and night all her mental and bodily powers to the service of mother India, has been strictly prohibited from even entering the Bombay Presidency. Was it because (in the opinion of the Bombay Government) the cruel act of the Madras Government was not sufficient in itself ? or because they feared that it would bring disgrace or bad name, or rather loss of prestige, to the Government of Lord Willingdon if they did not take such a step ? or because His Excellency desired that his name too, like that of that lady, should spread not only all over India but throughout the Empire? Perhaps her agitation for self-government and the Home Rule League established in London must have produced some commotion in the Bombay Secretariat, just as they frightened, or rather distressed the Anglo-Indian papers. Otherwise, such senseless orders as these which might give rise to public opposition and ridicule, would not have been issued by a Provincial Government. It is beyond comprehension how a lady who always resides in Madras could do anything prejudicial to public safety in the Bombay Presidency, or how, even if she attempted, she could succeed in it? Is it possible that the most learned Secretaries of the Bombay Secretariat have not learned why the Defence of India Act was passed, and on what occasions it should be made use of.

* * * * *

Now a word or two about another special order, or rather new procedure. None of the Bombay papers (except the Gnanaprakasam) has said a word about this order. You know, why? I shall tell you. It is said that the Government also sent an order beforehand to the editors of newspapers, warning them against commenting upon this order. It is a pity indeed that the authorities do not pause to consider whether these are acts which become the British Government!

* * * * *

Will that bold lady be frightened by vexatious orders like these? Perhaps, some one may hereafter order her to leave India. Then so much the better. It would be a good thing, if the Government tried to realise that rash and unwise Acts like these would only enhance the respect and love of Indians towards that lady. For, I myself had not a very good opinion of this lady, but these improper orders have begun to gradually root this (absence of good opinion?) out.

* * * * *

The stars of Bharatavarsha have not of late been auspicious to her. It is to be doubted whether the patience of mother India might not be somewhat injuriously affected, if her noblest sons whose sincere and incessant labours have no other object than her own advancement, are, as we now see, subjected to such cruel treatment. Mrs. Besant is being annoyed in an intolerable manner. Mr. Chakravarti, the sub-editor of the Bengalee, has become worthy of prison life, as if he were a friend of the anarchists! The Hindu members of the Allahabad Municipal Council have had to resign their membership. Let these alone. Now the Government have pounced upon Mr. Tilak in a manner that would give rise to great agitation among the people. This uncommonly bold and patriotic Indian, who had been deported for six or seven years, delivered only two public speeches after his return from jail, one at Belgaum and the other at Ahmednagar. The Government considered that they were seditious, and have demanded from him a security of rupees forty thousand for good conduct for a year. When on the celebration of his sixtieth birth-day, Mr. Tilak was presented by his friends and others a lakh of rupees as a souvenir thereof, Lord Willingdon might have thought that it would not be becoming his exalted position, if His Excellency also did not give him a suitable present. But none of these will save the extremely wicked Sir Valentine Chirol, for God is protector and God is witness!

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 26th, 1916.

The South African Indians.

45. The Desamata, of the 26th July, reproduces from the Andhrapatrika the article on the South African Indians already reported on page 1294 of the Weekly Newspaper Report.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 26th, 1916.

Ireland and India.

46. The Desamata, of the 26th July, institutes a comparison between Ireland and India in the matter of the treatment accorded to political offenders, and remarks:—While it is under contemplation to grant Home Rule to the Irish who have transgressed the laws of the land and revolted against the Government, the freedom of the press and of speech in India, whose people pray humbly for the grant of self-government on Colonial lines under the overlordship of His Majesty the King-Emperor, is restrained. Even before we cease all idle talk and unitedly fall to work, Home Rule will be granted to Ireland. Is this difference in treatment due to our weakness or to the desire of power on the part of the rulers or to colour prejudice?

The Desamata, of the 26th July, says in another column:—Captain J. R. White sided with the Irish revolutionists and tried to spread sedition among the British. He was given a fair trial in a Court of Law and then sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for three months. It might be easily guessed what cruel punishment would be inflicted here in India on one who was found guilty of a similar offence. While punishments in England tend to reform the individual punished, those in India ruin the offender and shake the confidence of the people in the rulers. It will surely contribute to the welfare of the British Empire if the rulers of this country also adopt less rigorous methods.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, July 26th, 1916.

47. In its leader on the subject of irrigation in the Gōdāvari delta, the Andhrapatrika, of the 29th July, says:—It is not a mere set of rules that is to-day needed in the matter of irrigation. There ought to be proper supervision over the work of the Public Works Department officers. The Revenue officers should have a voice in the distribution of water. The Government have not arranged for it. If the Government wish to do any good to the ryot, we hope they will pass the Madras Irrigation Panchayat Bill.

Irrigation in the Gōdāvari delta.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 29th, 1916.

48. In commenting on the speech of Sir Thomas Holland in Madras, the Andhrapatrika, of the 31st July, says:—Sir Thomas Holland has examined the conditions prevailing in India very carefully and spoke out his mind. He stated most emphatically that it is wrong to suppose that the Indians were fit only to be hewers of wood and drawers of water. India, he said, can supply any number of trained labourers; and in proof of this he pointed to the Tata Iron and Steel Works. The labourers there, he stated, were inferior to no European labourer. He is of opinion that protective tariff should be introduced where it ought to be, and it is for this that we have so long been praying.

Sir Thomas Holland.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 31st, 1916.

49. Referring to the rumour that the Defence of India Act will be extended to the Madras Presidency, the Andhrapatrika, of the 31st July, says:—If there is any truth in the rumour, we trust that Lord Pentland will consider again and again before extending the Act to this Province. In the hands of the subordinate officers, the Act has been a very bad weapon. The assistant editor of the Bengalee was first arrested under the ordinary law of the land, and was released for want of evidence. The police were not satisfied. They rearrested him under the Defence of India Act and wanted to see him suffer, no matter if he is innocent. The Madras Presidency is peaceful, and we trust that Lord Pentland and his colleagues will not be hasty.

The Defence of India Act.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, July 31st, 1916.

50. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 1st August, complains of corruption prevailing in Sub-Registrars' offices in the northern Circars, and commends the determination of the present Registrar, Mr. Ghulām Muhī-ud-dīn Sāhib, to put down all corruption in the offices under his charge. He hopes that the authorities may soon pass orders on the reports he submitted so that the subordinate officers may soon mend their ways.

The paper says that similar complaints have been received from the people of the Gudivada taluk of the Kistna district, and recommends the matter for the consideration of the departmental authorities.

The Registration department.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, August 1st, 1916.

51. The Andhrapatrika, of the 1st August, says:—We learn that the Government have refused to grant a passport to Mr. Tilak to go to England. Did the Bombay Government intend thereby to protect Sir Valentine Chirol, against whom Mr. Tilak has brought an action? Or did they fear that Mr. Tilak will agitate in England for Home Rule for India? If the news of the refusal to grant him a passport should spread in England, it will have the same effect as a hundred speeches of his, and England will have cause to resent the action of the Bombay Government.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, August 4th, 1916.

B. G. Tilak.

In the course of an article referring to the festivities on the occasion of the sixtieth birthday of Tilak, an ardent admirer of his writes to the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 4th August, as follows:—Mr. Tilak is a great ascetic. He thrice went to gaol in the interests of the country. If he were not true to his own self, he could have made himself a millionaire. If he were a millionaire, he would, perhaps, have died a miser. But Mr. Tilak cared for neither wealth nor power. He always obeyed the dictates of his conscience He resolved to serve the country. He met with obstacles. Nothing daunted, he thrice entered gaol. But he was not idle even there. He won world-wide fame by writing books such as his commentary on the Bhagavadgita. In addition to the prison life, he suffered distress for 14 years owing to the Tai Maharaj suit. But truth will always triumph in the end. He lost his wife and son while in gaol. The masses who have known what troubles he has borne deify him. The spontaneous contribution of one lakh for his birthday present is alone sufficient to prove how high he stands in popular esteem. Centuries ago when Socrates, the great philosopher, was found fault with by his Government and sentenced to death, the student population sought to bring about a revolution. But Socrates with his good advice dissuaded them from such attempts. He willingly took the poison which he was asked to drink. Mr. Tilak is exactly of the same nature. His avowed principle is to do good even to those who do him harm. That is why all who know him worship him. There are not many in this world who deserve such deification. In this wicked kali age we may be sure there is no one else like him.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 22nd, 1916.

Mr. Gandhi.

52. A correspondent to the Kistnapatrika, of the 22nd July, represents Mr. Gandhi to have said:—If we introduce machines into India and compete with foreigners, we will certainly meet with the same fate as has overtaken our European brethren who are proud of their civilization. It is admitted by all great men that the cause of the present war is the thirst for commercial superiority, which is growing more and more intense every day in Europe. . . . . In the factories the labourer works hard and gets 4 annas a day, while the proprietor, who supplies the capital from his ancestral property and sleeps idly at home, gets thousands out of the business. While one man works hard, another enjoys the result and moves about with pride. Many foreigners have established factories with their money and are robbing this country of its wealth. We help in this drainage of wealth by purchasing their articles under the name of swadeshi. It is, therefore, our duty to buy only those that are made by hand in this country.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, July 29th, 1916.

"Prayer".

53. In an article under this heading, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 29th July. writes:—The ignorant believe that God grants whatever we ask of Him. Prayers may imply either reasonable or unreasonable desires. The former come to be granted unasked. The latter never. This we can know from our every-day experience. Some things are possible and others impossible in this world. Impossible things can never become possible through prayer. Prayers cannot make grass grow to be a banyan; nor a fox to be an elephant. It is well to realise the uselessness of such prayers. Prayers can effect nothing. Good deeds are the only means of gaining our desires. The wisest of men lay stress on good deeds. Everyone ought to realise the truth of this advice.

BHARATHI, Bellary, July 28th, 1916.

The influx of Japanese goods into the Indian market.

54. In a lengthy leading article, the Bharathi, of the 28th July, bewailing the influx of the Japanese goods into the Indian market, observes:—The people have hardly had time to think they were free from the net which Germany had spread over them in the matter of industries, when Japan has stepped into the field and is flooding our market with her manufactures and is carrying away our wealth. At present there is not a line of industry which Japan does not represent. She has carefully studied the methods by which the Germans established their trade in India and is proceeding on the very same lines. She was importing raw products to the value of 14 lakhs from India prior to the outbreak of the war. This year the value of these imports is 180 lakhs. The value of the exports, too, has likewise gone up from 160 to 250 lakhs. These figures show what an enormous quantity of tawdries we get from Japan. The bazaars are literally flooded with them. This year Japan purchased the larger part of our raw cotton and exported to this country nearly three times the usual quantity of cotton fabrics. As soon as the supply of Austrian bangles was stopped by the war, Japan undertook to meet the demand. We were thus unable to manufacture even glass bangles for our women. Further, she is making enormous profits by supplying munitions to Russia and England. In the rubber and motor industries her position is still better. Her motor-tyre trade has gone up from one to six lakhs. While Japan is thus aggrandizing herself and is sucking our resources to the very dregs, neither our rulers nor our popular leaders have shown any the slightest activity. Even an English statesman is bound to regret this state of things. Japan's methods of trade are none of the best. Seeing the demand for German goods in India, Japanese manufacturers have begun to stamp their goods with marks implying that they were made in Germany. It is notorious that the quality of German goods is very inferior although the finish is excellent. The finish of Japanese goods is still better while the quality is, on the other hand, much worse. But of what avail is this cry? We are helpless victims to the habit of using these foreign goods, and whatever their quality may be, there can never be any lack of demand for them. Although we are a people with an ancient civilization and have for our rulers a nation of modern civilization, it seems never likely that we can escape the hard lot of having to depend upon Japan. It remains to be seen whether our rulers will now at least pity our condition. We do not know how and when we can otherwise escape the fear of "ja" (meaning that the consonant sound ja in German is also present in Japan).

A great hardship.

55. A correspondent in the Kerala Sanchari, of the 26th July, dwells upon the inconvenience and hardships that are likely to be caused to the people by the recent order of the Collector for the removal of the dam in the canal leading from the Tellicherry Railway station to the mouth of the Koduvalli river, the object of which seems to be to facilitate a free flow of water into and out of the tank near the Stationmaster's residence, which, after the filling up of the tank belonging to the well-known Beppan Sahib, has been used by the poor people for bathing and other purposes, points out that not only will the object be difficult to be attained, as the water running through the canal can scarcely reach the tank in question, but the removal will also reduce the income of the Government, inasmuch as the owners of the fields on either sides of the canal will no longer be able to raise two crops as they now do, and observes that it would be a great pity if the Collector or the Sub-Collector do not go to the spot, hold an enquiry into the matter, and redress the grievances of the people.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, July 26th, 1916.

The impressment of carts.

56. Referring to the resolution regarding the impressment of carts for the use of Government officials, moved in the Legislative Council in April last, the Kerala Patrika, of the 29th July, says:—The Government have now requested the Board of Revenue to fix the rates at which the Collectors should pay when they hire carts. The best thing would be to find out the rates obtaining in the various parts of the country, and to issue instructions to Government officials to pay according to those rates. There is no reason to think that there will be no difference between the rates prevailing in the country and those fixed by officers of independent powers. Hence, it is not desirable that the officers should be empowered to fix the rates.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, July 29th, 1916.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 28th, 1916.

India and self-government.

57. While welcoming the starting of the "Home Rule League" in England, the Manorama, of the 28th July, refers to the baselessness of the Times' attacks on it, which will cause no surprise to anybody, if its attitude towards the Irish Home Rule be taken into account, and says:—It is a well-known fact that Englishmen are second to none in doing what is right when facts are presented to them in their proper light. Our duty, therefore, is merely to give them an idea of the real state of things in India. It is a good thing, therefore, that a league has now undertaken to do that duty. May God induce the British Government to find out the real state of affairs in India, and treat her claims, with respect paying no heed whatever to the misrepresentations of papers like the Times.

MANORAMA, Calicut, July 28th, 1916.

The Imperial Conference.

58. The Manorama, of the 28th July, rejoices at the announcement of Mr. Asquith that India would be represented at the Imperial Conference, but doubts whether the appointment of some European merchants to represent India will meet with the approbation of the people and says:—It is not known how many members will be selected to represent India, and whether these will be nominated by the Government or selected by the Indian merchants. Another matter which requires elucidation, is whether the interests of Native States will be represented in this conference. Surely, they have a right to be represented in the conference which deals with questions relating to trade and industries after the war. But it is to be regretted that nothing has been said about them. These matters will, it is to be hoped, be considered and settled before the conference meets.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, August 1st, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Keralodayam, of the 1st August, rejoices that the authorities have now begun to recognise that India is an important part of the empire, and observes that, if the whole empire be imbued with this idea, India has a bright future before her.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

"Enforced silence."

59. The Qaumi Report, of the 24th July, writes:—The present unfortunate war has given a compulsory holiday to some newspapers while others are spending their days in enforced silence.

We do not know how far the Government is responsible for the latter procedure. Censors and Press Advisers have been appointed to lead and guide the press on behalf of the Government, but we do not know what their duties are. These officers generally note the publication of news which they disapprove.

The office of a leader or a guide is really a lucky one, but as regards the Indian or rather the Muhammadan press we find it is so unfortunately placed that it understands little of affairs and learns next to nothing about correct events.

Recently some Members of Parliament raised the question of the Mesopotamian campaign, and Mr. Asquith and others stopped them by telling them that any discussion of those events at present would be opposed to public interests. We admit that there are many things regarding which discussion would, in the interests of political expediency, be out of place, but the question is to what extent are purely religious and domestic Muslim affairs connected with politics?

Such matters as are unconnected with the declared policy of the Government are surely not opposed to public interests. Probably the authorities are unaware of the effect produced on the the public mind by the sudden silencing of the voice of the press or of the difficulty and embarrassment experienced by a single editor having to reply to and explain the question of the people individually.

Recently a report was published regarding Mrs. Besant to the effect that the Bombay Government had prohibited all the papers of that presidency from commenting upon the case.

Whether this is true or not the effect produced on peoples' minds by the revealing of the secret is, perhaps, unknown even to the Intelligence Department. Surely these people know best who "in the world of common people" see with their own eyes and hear with their own ears. It is the same case as regards silence in other matters.

Rumours are the worst enemies of the Government and the difficulty is that we are not afforded the privilege of contradicting or representing matters in their true light. Would that subsidised papers had taken up the matters with reference to which we had to observe silence. Certainly intricate problems cannot be understood by those who keep aloof either at their houses or in their offices.

The press has the power to destroy suspicious, contradict rumours and dispel doubts and misgivings; and it is our personal experience that during the present war, this power has been found to be most useful and effective. But when certain authorities allow the public to feed on gossip and do not permit the press to remove misconceptions, surely the error does not lie with the press.

It is not necessary to mention the practice hitherto adopted by the Islamic press and how we succeed by acting with perseverance and courage in the performance of our complicated duty. Undoubtedly we believe that loyalty to the king is an important and bounden duty. We do not complain of the Government or the law, but we consider the proceedings unreasonable, injurious and destructive by which the liberty of the press is taken away and its mouth is closed while false and perplexing ideas spread among the people. We hope that our responsible authorities will inquire into these matters and not allow us to remain in the present unfortunate position any longer.

Qaumi Report, Madras, July 22nd, 1916.

60. The Qaumi Report, of the 22nd July, writes:—Some people are asking whether the Mahdī has appeared or is about to appear and the sacred traditions of the Prophet lead us to believe that he who becomes master of Arabia is the Mahdī.

Who is the Mahdī?

Although the best course is not to pay any attention to such questions, still, in order to arrest the spread of perplexity among the people, it is advisable to throw some light upon the subject of (the advent of) the Mahdī. It should be remembered that one proof of the nearness of the day of judgment will be the appearance of the Mahdī, but we cannot say whether the advent of that Imam (the Mahdī) will synchronise with the period of political or religious decline of the Mussalmans. It is impossible, however, to throw any light on the personality of the Madhī, upon whom be peace! Until such time as the omnipotence of God and the powerful law of nature demonstrate to us the final spiritual or temporal decline (God forbid!) of the Mussalmans.

We, therefore, assert that the stability or existence of Islam in the word will, without any cause for apprehension, continue until such time as twelve Khalifas, all of them belonging to the Koreish, have arisen. Probably this will be the beginning of decay.

It is necessary to mention in this connection the tradition of Jabir-ibu Samra found in Abū Daūd's collection: He said, "I heard the Apostle (say) this religion will continue until there have been over you twelve Khalifas around whom the people shall gather." Then I heard the Prophet utter something I did not understand, so I asked my father; "What does he say?" He replied "They all belong to the Koreish", Abū Daūd, 87).

There is another version of this tradition:—"This religion will continue to be in the ascendant until there have been twelve Khalifas." He said, "The people have become proud and impatient." Then he whispered something. I asked my father "What does he (the Prophet) say?" He replied "They all are of the Koreish." (Ibid 87.)

There are many traditions current regarding the appearance of the Mahdī, one of which throws light on your question: viz., "The world will not pass away or come to an end until one of my houses, whose name shall be identical with mine, becomes master of Arabia."

The occasion of the appearance of the Mahdī is referred to in a different way, in another tradition, viz., "On the death of the Khalifa dissensions will arise and one of the men of Madīna will come forth and flee towards Mecca.

Many of the people of Mecca will come to him and take him out against his will and swear allegiance to him between Ruku and Mukām, etc. (Abū Daūd, page 88).

In any case the Mahdī's invitation will be general and the idea that such signs have not yet appeared in the world seems to be fairly correct. It is true that the most dreadful war the world has ever seen is being waged and that the laws of God and of tradition are being broken, but the time is yet a long way off and the following tradition is worth remembering :—

On the authority of Auf-i-bu Mālik the Apostle of God said "God will not bring upon this people two swords, one their own and the other that of their enemy."

It seems advisable that we should leave the matter to the fulfilment of God's signs and believe in the ordinances of the Faith. There is no safer way than this.

Qaumi Report, Madras, July 30th, 1916.

India and Mussalmans.

61. The Qaumi Report, of the 30th July, in a leader on the marginally-noted subject, writes:—At present hopes and desires are much en evidence in every part of the British Empire. Australia, Canada, New Zeland, Ireland, etc., have plainly said that after the war they should be granted more rights and privileges. These peoples are raising the question of their freedom and independence. They assert they have sacrificed their lives and property for the safety of the British Crown, a fact which should certainly be recognised and rewarded after the war. The Government of the King-Emperor hear these voices and are giving assurances that after the war reasonable rights and privileges will surely be granted. Mr. Asquith, the Prime Minister, has promised "after the war the status of all the Colonies of the Empire will be revised". Probably this means that States subordinate to the British Empire will not remain in their present, humble and subordinate condition and that their rights and privileges will be enhanced.

India also is ringing with this question, and is putting forward her demand for "Home Rule" after the war. India's sacrifices in life and property are not a whit less than those of others. The Prime Minister and Members of Parliament have admitted that India has rendered more help than was expected and has distinguished herself by her practical proofs of loyalty.

The Hindu press are putting forward certain demands and Mussalmans in general are of opinion that they are included and that, whatever rights are conceded, will be granted not to Hindus only but to Mussalmans also, for Mussalmans are Indians. But the question is: are Mussalmans ready to classify themselves as a subordinate community and accept rights conceded to them as such? Will the Mussalmans be satisfied with "Home Rule"? Is "Home Rule" sufficient to maintain the status of Islam?

No one can deny that the sphere of Islamic connexions is very extensive, nay, world-wide. We are connected with colonial, foreign, internal and Imperial affairs; and apart from these we can hardly be Mussalmans. Our life is not entirely political, but it is connected with scores of educational, economical, social, political, internal, and international problems. If in future "Home Rule" can make us prominent in all these relations we can surely entertain a hope that "The future of our community and religion is not in any way in danger". Until these questions are settled in detail we cannot regard the proposal of "Home Rule" as our aim.

But this does not mean that we do not desire to invite the attention of the British Empire to the granting of our special rights. Our first demand is that our religious individuality be first admitted in the British Parliament. We, Mussalmans without religion, are nothing. Recent experiences prove that most of the responsible authorities of the Empire are unacquainted with our religious individuality and personality and they have generally in their ignorance with the best of intentions damage our religious rights and wound our spiritual feelings. They have been hasty in relying on misrepresentations with reference to ourselves and they have not taken a correct estimate of us. These people, who are thousands of miles away from us, and are reading our feelings by the biased light kindled by some self-interested persons. They are thus wounding our feelings and injuring our souls. We do not know whether these misunderstandings will be removed or increased when the time of "Home Rule" comes. Nor do we know whether the Home or the Imperial Government is able to redress our grievances. (To be continuad.)

III.—Legislation.

62. In a leading article giving a summary of the representations of the Bombay Press Association to His Excellency the Viceroy complaining of the rigour of the Press Act, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 29th July, writes:—The furtherance of our own interests demands the strengthening of the British Rule in India. Terrorism and high-handedness fail of their purpose even in one's own family circle. They are worse than useless in governing a subject race. That is why they have organised democratic institutions in Europe. The people can have confidence in the Government only so long as the latter reciprocate that feeling. Mutual distrust is harmful to both the rulers and the ruled. That is why democracy is so popular everywhere. The press law tends to destroy the mutual confidence between the Government and the people. Where tact fails, high-handedness is still more unavailing. We hope that His Excellency the Viceroy and the Government of India will give due attention to this aspect of the situation.

63. In a leading article commenting on the annual report of the revenue administration in Mysore, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 2nd August, reproduces the criticisms expressed by the Vrittanta Patrike (vide Report No. 31, article 80).

Vokkaligara Patrike, Bangalore, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

Revenue administration in Mysore.

64. The Malayali, of the 26th July, expresses surprise at the attempts made by the European planters in Travancore, who enjoy many a privilege in the State, to get the newly imposed tax on tea, which is comparatively very insignificant, withdrawn through the instrumentality of the British Government, who, it is to be hoped, will not interfere in the matter. According to the paper the present financial condition of the State demands the taxing of rubber and coffee also, besides the levying of an income-tax on the foreigners in the State, and the Darbar should, under no circumstances, give up the tax on tea, which, if they did, would be attributed either to their weakness or to their inability to do anything else than squeeze the people of he country and get money out of them.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

1. The following appears in New India of the 7th August :— New India, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1916.

German v. British War Communiqués.

"Circumstances alter cases.

"The Germans admit that the Allied air-squadron attacked Namur; the cable says that the German communiqué 'adds the usual unconvincing comment that small material damage was done'. Two German æroplanes dropped 'many bombs' on the town of Ismailia and the shipping on Lake Umsa, 'but no damage was done,' reports General Murray. Is this also unconvincing? That many bombs should be dropped on a town and 'no damage should be done, seems to us not only unconvincing, but impossible."

2. New India, of the 7th August, remarks:—"The Duke of Buccleuch had the impertinence to make an effort to prevent Viscount Haldane from speaking in the House of Lords. Viscount Haldane—the great statesman of whose services England, to her sore loss, has permitted herself to be deprived by a senseless newspaper howl—brushed the ducal interrupter aside like an importunate fly, and calmly began his speech—the speech that our readers will find in our columns to-day. Men who understand military matters, like Lord French, acknowledge gratefully his priceless services as War Minister, for he created the Territorial Army that was ready to England's hand at the outbreak of war. . . . . When the nation has recovered from the effects of its Harmsworth poisoning, it will do justice to the strong heart and noble brain that have borne shameful injustice in silence for England's sake." New India, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1916.

Lord Haldane.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

3. Extract from the Report (Part I) on the Vernacular Newspapers of Bihar and Orissa, No. 30, for the week ending 29*th July* 1916, paragraph 33. "The Asha (Berhampur), of the 24th July, in a leaderette writes that the Superintendent of Police, Ganjām, appointed four Oriyas as Sub-Inspectors of Police in the Ganjām district last year. After this the Hon'ble Raja Madan Mohan Singh Deb informed Government of the necessity of appointing more Oriya Police officers in the districts of Ganjām and in the agency of Jeypore. An order of the Government then clearly laid down that if suitable Oriya men be not available from amongst the Oriyas of the Madras Presidency they should be brought down from Political Orissa. But as the result of this only one Oriya was this year selected as Sub-Inspector of Police in the whole district of Ganjām against four selected last year. The paper expresses surprise at the fact that Oriya candidates were examined in Telugu conversation and in reading Telugu manuscripts. It seems curious to the paper that last year without any orders from the Government four Oriyas were appointed as Sub-Inspectors of Police and this year in spite of the Government orders aforesaid and much agitation the outturn was so scanty!" Asha, Berhampur, July 24th, 1916.

A complaint.

4. The West Coast Spectator, of the 5th August, states:—"Petty thefts have almost become the order of the day in this town, and not a week passes without our reporting some. From Chalapuram, Talli, and the suburbs comes the story West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 5th, 1916.

Petty thefts in Calicut.

that the householder is not free from the nocturnal domiciliary visits of the light-fingered gentry who happily confine their attention to petty articles and orchards. These thefts could be prevented by the police. Only there should be regular beats and checks.

"During cold, monsoon nights beat constables are liable to neglect their duty, and the Town Inspector would do well to be a little more vigorous in his nocturnal inspections. This duty must not be entrusted to his subordinates as they are not likely to bring as much sense of responsibility to the work as the Inspector. We should also like to know in this connection, when the K.D. list was last revised, and also if the police look after the registered K.D.'s properly during nights."

(b) Courts.

UTKAL DIPIKA, Cuttack, July 22nd, 1916.

Oriya to be the Court language in certain districts of natural Orissa.

5. Extract from the Report (Part I) on the Vernacular Newspapers of Bihar and Orissa, No. 30, for the week ending 29th July 1916, paragraph 32. "A correspondent of the Utkal Dipika (Cuttack) of the 22nd July, after describing in a long article the various disadvantages under which the Oriya people labour, observes as follows:—'Justice was, however, done to Sambalpur by its restoration to Orissa by Sir Andrew Fraser, but scant courtesy is still meted out to Orissa by the Government declaration of Oriya as the sole Court language in Gumsur Division of Ganjām and the Feudatory States of the Singhbhum district. Can it be said with truth that the Oriyas owe a debt of gratitude to British Government for still holding in abeyance the extension of the privilege long overdue in the three aggrieved Oriya districts of Singhbhum in Chota Nagpur, Ganjām (except Chicacole taluk) and the whole of the Jeypore district in the adjacent Madras Province? Nevertheless we can't be too thankful to Sir Edward Gait's Government for the small mercy shown to the States of Kharsawan and Seraikela and confidently look forward to the day when His Honour will see his way to declare Oriya as the sole Court language in the whole district of Singhbhum.'"

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1916.

The Commissioner of Police, Madras, and a religious procession.

6. The following appears in New India of the 9th August:—"It is a little difficult to follow the mind of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Trotter in his refusal to issue a mandamus to the Commissioner of Police, directing him to issue a license for a religious procession. His Lordship refused the mandamus, but said that if the 'Commissioner persisted in refusing a license year after year under cover of section 41 of the Police Act, it might be a fit case for interference by the High Court'. The Commissioner, as a matter of fact, had been 'refusing the license year after year' since 1912. His Lordship appears to have overlooked this, and to have been misled by the statement of the Honourable the Advocate-General that 'the order was restricted to the exigencies of the case'".

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1916.

The Tilak case.

7. New India, of the 11th August, remarks:—"We have to thank the Bombay Chronicle for securing and printing the official translations of Mr. Tilak's incriminated speeches, as put in by the Crown. The translation is very rough, and some sentences are unintelligible, but the meaning is limpid and simple, even through the official woodenness. When the present proceedings are disposed of, we hope that Mr. Tilak will give us a translation as pungent as evidently was the Marathi original, in the strong English style of which he is a master."

(d) Education.

WESTERN STAR, Trivandrum, Aug. 3rd, 1916.

Students' troubles.

8. Writing on this subject, the Western Star, of the 3rd August, says:—"There can be no doubt that the new forces, political and otherwise, which are gaining ground in India, some of them, we fear, at too rapid a rate for the true and lasting welfare of the country, have begun to draw the immature, impulsive, emotional student classes of the population within their swirl. . . . . There is grave reason, however, to fear that, unless well-directed, tactful measures of restraint are adopted by all who are concerned in the great and difficult task of moulding the youth of the nation into right minded, upright and honourable citizens, it may not be long before we have seen our student classes dragged into the very vortex of a political situation in the midst of which it is not desirable that they should occupy any place at all. . . . . Perhaps, the very worst feature of this tendency to tempt the student classes to rush into movements with which they should not be suffered to have anything to do is that which is represented by the extraordinary readiness with which of late, certain organs of public opinion constitute themselves the champions of students and school boys who have had differences with their professors and schoolmasters. . . . . Yet, in all the instances to which we have alluded, certain champions of the students did not think it necessary to endeavour to discourage resort by impulsive and undiscerning young men to method, at once indefensible and calculated to produce the most harmful consequences. . . . . If students are to be applauded whenever they go on strike or act in some other unconstitutional way, on the ground that they have been unfairly dealt with there would be an end of all discipline and order. To encourage students in such practices is to get them to believe that in all cases they may claim to be a law unto themselves and to be judges not only of their own actions, but of the actions, as well as the intentions of those who are set in authority over them . . . . . No doubt the Indian student is high-souled, but that is no reason why he should be encouraged to develop wrong-headedness. A proper mental balance is as much necessary for the good of the nation as nobility of soul and goodness of character. The present tendency is not calculated to preserve the mental balance of those who will be the citizens of to-morrow."

Indian students.

9. Referring to Mr. G. S. Arundale's lecture at Benares on Home Rule, New India, of the 5th August, remarks:—

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 5th, 1916.

"Mr. Arundale very properly pointed out that when England won the great Reform Bill of 1832 education was utterly neglected and corruption was rampant. He might have added that drunkenness was universal both in the higher and lower classes, that poverty was appalling, that masses of the people were living under bestial conditions, that the consequent immorality was shocking, that highway robberies were frequent, that criminal justice was barbarous—persons being hanged for stealing a sheep or for stealing 5*s.* worth of goods—and that riots, rick-burning, etc., were frequent. Compared to England in 1832, India is refined, civilised, sober, and altogether superior. . . . . Now touring in his old province, he finds changes for the worse, Allahabad a hot-bed of repression and narrowness, uneasiness and bitterness in the student population. Little wonder that he feels heart-broken, seeing the thousands of youths, wandering 'as sheep without a shepherd'. The saddest thing of all is that student enthusiasm, that priceless asset for the country's future, is now and again turned by the folly and harshness of the rulers into a devastating flame where it should be a comforting fire. Instead of a sacred fire on the altar, it is turned into a fire of hell.

"One of the crimes of New India in the eyes of the governing class is its sympathy with students. Its editor, being a reader of history, knows that where the young feel strongly thither the nation goes within a few years. The growing enthusiasm of the college students for Home Rule means that we shall have Home Rule within a few years. Government seems to be blind to the fact that the new self-respect of the students, the refusal to submit silently to words of abuse, means that Indian youth is high spirited not tame, and cannot be crushed into submission by threats and terrorism. These boys that are bullied to-day will to-morrow be men, resolute to win their freedom. Would it not be wiser to win their love, while it is so easy to win it, than to arouse their resentment and sow antagonism in the future?

Young India can be won; it cannot be coerced. . . . . Might it not be well, for the sake of the future, to remember that we are dealing with men, not boys?"

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1916.

Indians and the English language.

10. Referring to the comments of the Madras Times on the errors in English of an Indian correspondent of that paper, New India, of the 8th August, writes:—

"Is it fair?

"It always seems to us very ungracious for foreigners, who talk the languages of the country singularly ill, to sneer at the English of Indians, taught them in an education under foreign control. For an Indian to speak of 'Jupiter Pluvius' misspelt, and of a 'bow ideal' is obviously wrong; but Indians are not to blame if they sometimes talk the stilted Johnsonese they are taught instead of simple every-day English. It is the fault of the absurd English education forced on them. Englishmen might, however, learn modesty, if they knew how their bad vernacular, clumsy expressions and hopeless mispronunciation arouses unholy mirth in the Indians they address in 'Sahib Hindi' or other vernaculars."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1916.

Education of girls.

11. New India, of the 8th August, observes:—"We are astonished to see that the Municipal Council of Coimbatore is in favour of placing the primary education of girls 'entirely in the hands of Government'. What kind of Hindus or Mussalmans can these Councillors be, that they wish the education of the future wives and mothers of Hindus and Mussalmans to be placed under the control of a Government pledged to 'religious neutrality,' i.e., to the withholding of all religious, and therefore of all useful and inspiring moral, teaching. We pity the future homes of the people of Coimbatore, if the girl-children are to be brought up in such an educational atmosphere as is favoured by their Municipal Council."

(e) Local and Municipal.

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1916.

Municipal oppression.

12. The Indian Patriot, of the 7th August, writes:—"If the educated public would not take steps betimes and the inroads of municipal menials and subordinate staff are not checked, local self-government would be at least as much of an oppression as the Police. To take the Madras Corporation which, we suppose, is the premier municipality on this side of India, it is well known how the institution is fast degenerating into an engine of oppression. . . . . The assessment of houses is a permanent source of grievance. There is no fixed standard to go by. Houses that are kept clean and tidy are assessed higher, while the same kind of houses, but maintained carelessly, are assessed low. It thus amounts to a crime to keep the house clean. These are some of the few instances of daily worry and annoyance of the rate-payers. Absolutely nothing has been done yet to protect the citizens and the rate-payers from such annoyances. The Municipal Commissioners can do much if they care, but some of them do not care; many are inaccessible, and the very few who are known to take an interest are pestered from all sides. . . . . It is the poor that suffer always, and they can afford to suffer the least. The wealthy and the influential can reach the superior officers, and even rules are broken to favour them. The poor are treated unjustly, and justice is not theirs. We have not rate-payers' association in every division, carefully watching the activities of the corporation. The best that can be said of us is that we are getting on. Those who can afford to pay, pay and forget about it unless they should be roused against the corporation, in which case they always deal with the superior officers and, therefore, get things done easily. The poor and middle class who own houses have unspeakable grievances, which call for an active Defence Association against municipal oppression."

(k) General.

13. The West Coast Spectator, of the 3rd August, remarks:—"The political atmosphere of the metropolis are thick with rumours, one of which says that Mrs. Besant is very likely to be put up before the Chief Presidency Magistrate to be bound over to keep the peace, to be of good behaviour, as they are doing in the case of Mr. Tilak. We thought that the security sections of the code were intended for rogues, vagabonds and law breakers. We have now to revise our belief."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Aug. 3rd, 1916.

Rumours regarding Mrs. Annie Besant.

14. In a leader commenting on an article in a Bombay contemporary on the present situation and the relations between Great Britain and India, the West Coast Spectator, of the 3rd August, states:—"Necessarily the question arises if this is to be India's lot now, what will it be at the end of the war? It is this question they should answer. Apart from these facts, there are the Press Act and the Defence Act which are worked, to us it seems, with unnecessary vigor. We do not write in this strain in a spirit of cavil, neither have we the least desire to embarrass the Government in any way or manner in these critical times. The people have important duties to perform, several have obligations to the Government at this juncture, but we ask whether the Government also have not certain obligations? We are quite prepared to admit that their intentions are noble, devoid of any motive other than the best and that whatever they do, they do in the interests of the people and of their own. But one cannot disguise the fact that misunderstandings do exist, which is most unfortunate. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the Government are confronted with certain difficulties which they are bound to remove in the interests of peace and order, and that anarchists, though very few, are abroad in the north bent upon brewing mischief. . . . . There is the Home Rule propaganda abroad, but it has not assumed a militant aspect, and it never will. The people as a whole, we repeat, have neither the desire nor the inclination to embarrass the Government with it at this juncture. . . . . We refuse to believe that the Government of India are not aware of the existence of discontent and grievances and the significance of recent events. We have, so far, received no hopes of any bright feature, and judged by the events that have taken place one is justified in falling into despair. It is the duty of the Government of India, then, to take the matter up with the Imperial Government, and place before them a true picture of the situation which is of their own creation. . . . . The time has come for the Government of India to take a spirited stand by the people of India, to ask for a clear and unequivocal declaration of policy from the Imperial Government without any delay, so as to remove misgivings and clear the atmosphere of much of the tension that is now plainly visible. . . . . Hope deferred makes the heart sick, and let us hope that in view of the new situation, Lord Chelmsford will exert his authority and influence and prevail upon the Premier to revise the policy of drift which is capable of doing much mischief."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Aug. 3rd, 1916.

The new situation.

15. The following appears in New India of the 5th August:—

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 5th, 1916.

The Defence of India Act.

"The Offence Act.

"Mr. Theagaraya Chetti spoke very plainly to Sir William Meyer at the Chamber of Commerce yesterday on the anxiety felt by the mercantile community with regard to the rumoured extension of the Act to the Madras Presidency; he appealed to Sir William Meyer, as a Member of the Government, to save them from the measure, if it were intended to apply it. Sir William Meyer took not the slightest notice of the appeal, but preserved an ominous silence. Coupled with the threats of the Madras Mail, often found to have priority of Government information, the ignoring of the appeal is significant, and the result is greatly increased anxiety among the merchants."

16. The West Coast Spectator, of the 5th August, remarks:—"The Hindu and New India call attention to an article in an Anglo-Indian paper on the Defence of India Act in which it goes into violence over

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Aug. 5th, 1916.

The Madras Mail and the Defence of India Act.

the leaders who had decided to hold a protest meeting. We have seen the article ourselves, and must at once 'award the biscuit' to our amiable contemporary for vulgarity, recklessness and impudence. Verily, the time has come for the Local Government to request this paper to desist from the undignified game of creating class hatred."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 5th, 1916.

"Rule of Folly in India."

17. Referring to the article "Rule of Folly in India" by John Scurr from the Herald (London), New India, of the 5th August, says:—"We reprint to-day an article from the pen of Mr. John Scurr, one of the most powerful and trusted of the Labour Leaders. . . . . Mr. Scurr, Mr. Robert Smille, Mr. Ben Tillett, 'the heads of the three leading Trade Unions,' are all with us, heart and soul. At present, their first duty is to help in the supply of munitions to crush Prussianism on the Continent. After the war, it will be their duty, and their delight, to destroy Prussianism within the Empire, and to insist that Great Britain having fought with Indian help for the liberty of nations in the continent, shall maintain the same principle towards the nation within the Imperial circle."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Aug. 5th, 1916.

Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya and the Imperial Legislative Council.

18. The West Coast Spectator, of the 5th August, has the following:—"Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya has been unseated. We expected it when we heard that people were abroad spreading stories about the veteran publicist. This defeat is certainly a disaster for as we said the other day Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya is one of the very few leaders who are selfless and carry an unsullied record. The defeat is all the more regrettable, because he was pitted against two gentlemen whom we regard as mere pigmies before the veteran. By the way, Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya is not an Home Ruler of the red-hot type. Had this anything to do with his compulsory retirement?"

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1916.

The Congress Presidentship.

19. Mrs. Annie Besant writes as follows in New India of the 7th August:—"The election of the Congress President for the present year is one of supreme importance to the national cause. It is the first United Congress since 1907; it is the Congress at which—in order to undo the harm done at Bombay by Sir Satyendra P. Sinha—a pronounced Home Ruler should fill the presidential chair. Further, if it be possible, the President should be a man who is not entirely obnoxious to the Congress elders, while he commands the confidence of the youngers in the country. Such a combination is hard to find. Moreover, the attack of two Local Governments on the liberty of the press and the liberty of the subject, as embodied for the moment in myself; the attack of the Bombay Government on the much-venerated Mr. Tilak, with its insulting attempt to silence him under the shameful proviso introduced into the Indian Penal Code (?) empowering a magistrate to exact bonds to be of 'good behaviour' from any patriot whose love for his own country makes him 'suspect' of the police—and what patriot is not suspect? the chasing of men from Province to Province; the continued internment of the brothers, Shaukar Ali and Muhammad Ali; the many papers killed and wounded to death by the harsh administration of the Press Act; the stoppage of telegrams and the consequent misrepresentation of public opinion; the interning of suspects in Bengal; the cruel harshness and insults to Indian students, provoking strikes; all these things demand a President who will express, calmly but boldly, the profound dissatisfaction felt in India with the present coercion, unparalleled since the days of Lord Curzon, whose rule was denounced in open Congress by Mr. Gokhale, as the worst since that of Aurangazeb.

"The strongest protest that could have been made would have been my own election; that would have told the Government with a trumpet voice that India would have none of their coercion. But it must be remembered that I am very obnoxious to most of the Congress elders, who still govern most of the Congress Committees; while the country is overwhelmingly with me, the very Moderates are bitterly against me. Then we have all the people who do not 'see eye-to-eye with Mrs. Besant' in everything, and do not think her 'safe'. Then there are the timid people, who are afraid of official frowns—poor souls, often afraid for wife and little ones, whose food depends on official smiles. Lastly, there are the few who want office and are content to sacrifice principle to gain it, who give up political work for their country for place, the people like Wordsworth, of whom the people say :

> Just for a handful of silver he left us.
> Just for a ribbon to stick in his coat.

"Looking at all this, I decided to withdraw my name, though it stood at the top of those recommended by the Madras Congress Committee. Having worked so hard to have a United Congress, I did not care to have a quarrel over myself when the United Congress was won. Only a unanimous vote of all committees would have been of any use as a vindication of liberty. A divided vote might have caused bitter feeling."

HINDU, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 7th August, says :—"The remarks of 'an Indian publicist' who is a tried and veteran worker in Indian public life, as well as of two of our up-country contemporaries on the defeat of Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya at the Imperial Council election which we have published elsewhere, reflect the trend of popular opinion in this Presidency. 'An Indian publicist', and the two journals referred to would be still more amazed to learn the result of a meeting of the Madras Provincial Congress Committee held on Saturday evening, when the subject of the final selection of one name for the Presidentship of the next Congress came up for consideration. The names of Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya and of Diwan Bahadur Govindaraghava Ayyar who was the Chairman of the meeting, were proposed for the office of President of the Congress. Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya was defeated and Mr. Govindaraghava Ayyar was elected by a majority of votes of those present. Seeing that Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya had the largest number of the votes of the Congress Committees among those whose names had been put forward in all the Provinces and had the best prospect of being elected President at the final voting, the Madras Committee has taken a serious step in throwing him overboard and casting their vote in favour of Mr. Govindaraghava Ayyar whose place in the preliminary elections is very low and who stands little chance of being elected President of the ensuing Congress. We do not wish to say anything in disparagement of the ability or services of Mr. Govindaraghava Ayyar who stands in the front ranks of the public workers of this Presidency. It is impossible, however, to account for the setting aside by the Madras Committee of the eminent qualifications and undoubted claims of Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya to be President of the Congress except upon the hypothesis that malign influences have been at work and have guided the action of the majority of the committee. . . . . This is like cutting off your nose to spite your face, and we desire to draw the attention of the Congress Committees of the other parts of the country to this most stultifying feature of the Madras Congress Committee's action, in order that they may not be misled into thinking that the latter reflects the general opinion of the educated and thinking men of this Presidency. A caucus of pigmy politicians is usually dominant in the counsels of the Madras Committee. Men who were meekly subservient to an imperious moderate leader some years back, are now equally pliant followers of a leader of anti-moderate politics. . . . . Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya has all his life been an honorary public worker. He has, unlike most Madras public men, never sought a Government appointment, nor has he been conferred a title. His fellow countrymen would be wanting in their duty to the country and to him if they fail to recognise the value of his services and talents by giving him the highest honour which they can bestow, viz., the office of the President of the Congress. It is passing strange that a majority in the Madras Congress Committee should have acted in such a narrow spirit."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1916.

The Indian Patriot, of the 8th August, observes :—"We regret that bad feeling has been created in Madras in connection with the presidential election for the Congress. The list submitted by the Lucknow Reception Committee of the Congress to the several Congress Committees showed that Mr. C. Vijayarāghava Achārya had the largest number of votes, at the preliminary election, and it would have been perfectly legitimate and wise if he had been finally elected by the Madras Committee. But the Madras Committee by a majority voted for Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Ayyar who has another vote, that of the United Provinces. He has, therefore, been elected only by two committees, and cannot expect to succeed against men who have obtained more than two votes. That being the situation, it would have been gracious and just on the part of the Madras Committee to have voted for Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya who has the confidence of four provinces besides Madras which originally voted for him. . . . . We hope that other Provincial Committees will be more alive to his claims, and if they elect him out of genuine appreciation, the Madras Committee will have to regret that it rejected him. Nobody would venture to question his fitness, and it will be impossible to justify his exclusion on any conceivable ground. . . . . We hope other provincial committees will not allow themselves to be influenced by the example of Madras, and that they will, in accordance with constitutional precedent, elect the man who has obtained the largest number of votes at the preliminary election. Next to Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya, we would undoubtedly declare ourselves for Mr. Ambika Charan Muzamdar who has the claim alike of conspicuous ability and knowledge and of prolonged service for the Congress, beginning from the first session at Bombay in 1885."

West Coast Reformer, Calicut, Aug. 9th, 1916.

The West Coast Reformer, of the 9th August, states:—"Seeing that Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya's name has been suggested by the largest number of provincial committees for the presidentship of the next Congress, and particularly advocated by the reception committee at Lucknow, and seeing that Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya's candidature for the Imperial Council membership has been lamentably rejected, we have been thinking that the Madras Congress Committee would not be so unpatriotic and impolitic as to fail to give its support to the nomination of Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya for the congress presidentship. But we are mistaken, for we find that the provincial committee has rejected Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya and recommented Mr Govindaraghava Ayyar! This surely comes as a great surprise and one is led to think that there have been back-hand dealings in this affair."

Indian Patriot, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1916.

The Uriya representation.

20. The Indian Patriot, of the 7th August, observes:—"We have received several representations from prominent Uriya gentlemen strongly regretting the absence, from the Legislative Council, of a member to whom they can turn to ventilate their grievances. The Zamindar of Serugada, although an Uriya, is looked upon as a pro-Telugu, and we are safe in saying that he has not the confidence of the educated Uriya. The Uriyas were not content with the Raja of Dharakota, not because the Raja was not sympathetic and thoroughly their representative—he was both—but he being a Zamindar, he could not often leave his estate and attend every meeting; neither was he able to devote much time to his work. They wanted an educated Uriya who could stand in the midst of the Andhra champions and plead for his down-trodden race. The Uriyas have many grievances. Their language is neglected. This educational progress is hampered. The Uriya boy is taught by a Telugu teacher. The officials are most of them Telugus. The educated Uriya is a stranger in his own land and he is helpless. If any community in this Presidency deserves representation it is the Uriyas: and that community will go without representation these three years if the Madras Government should not make another nomination."

New India, Madras, Aug, 7th, 1916.

Provincial representatives.

21. New India, of the 7th August, states:—"There is certainly nothing new in the demand of Anglo-Indians to control the Government policy; they were doing it to no small extent while the Government of India was stationed at Calcutta, and it is notorious that the effort made by Lord Hardinge to free the administration from that influence was never forgiven. We are, therefore, not surprised at the attitude assumed by the Anglo-Indian journals of Calcutta towards a feature of the Bengal Council Regulations, which, as the Bengalee complains, 'makes it possible for the non-official European members of the Council to determine the elections for Indian representation. . . . . The position of the Anglo-Indian community is no doubt very strong in Calcutta, but still does it not look very grotesque that a number of non-Indians, counting not even a quarter of a million men, should have a third of the non-official or elected seats in a Province of nearly fifty million people?"

Punjabi Christians in the army

22. In an article under the heading "A regrettable development," New India, of the 8th August, states:—"The Leader draws prominent attention to a statement in the Viceroy's speech to the Christian deputation that recently waited on him, to the effect that the companies of Christians recently raised for the army in the Punjab had been given their own officers. . . . . In other words, if a Hindu or a Muslim embraces Christianity in the Punjab, he has a chance of being accepted as an officer in the commissioned ranks, but he will not have that opportunity if he sticks to his ancestral faith. We do not think any further comments are needed to expose the injustice involved to the non-Christian subjects. . . . . In the case of the Indian Christians, the only qualification is that they have embraced, some during the course of the last decade, the same faith as the British, the French and the Germans; but is that a matter of specially military value? We await an answer.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1916.

The Pilgrim Committee's Report.

23. The West Coast Spectator, of the 8th August, writes:—"The mountain in labour has at last brought forth. The Pilgrim Committee's report has seen the light of day, and expecting much useful information and suggestions for the improvement of the lot of the pilgrim, whose woes are legion, we were anxiously awaiting the publication of the report, but we must at once express our profound disappointment. . . . . We must mention, perhaps, at the outset that the Government made an initial blunder in settling the composition of the committee. The conditions of pilgrim life are best enquired into and appreciated by Indians much more than by any number of foreigners, though belonging to the heaven-born service, and a committee of Hindus would undoubtedly have disclosed many more interesting particulars and made valuable suggestions. Mr. Ramachandra Rao, one of the members of the committee, being a Hindu, has understood the conditions in their true light which has resulted in a minute of dissent."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR' Calicut, Aug. 8th, 1916.

Sir Harold Stuart on medical relief.

24. Referring to Sir Harold Stuart's speech at the Prize Distribution of the Madras Medical College, the Indian Patriot, of the 9th August, states:—"Medical relief in India is in a most backward condition, and as yet no resolute steps have been taken by any Government. We have any number of admissions of backwardness, but officials seem to be able to suppress their sense of duty by the thought that they are helpless. Several lakhs and crores would be required; we have not the lakhs and the crores; and, therefore, medical relief must perforce go halting. When the Government make up their mind to allot any large sum of money for this purpose, it is not for the extension of medical relief but to build a new hospital on the Spur Tank, because a medical expert finds some difficulty about oscultation. We hope that all their vague sympathies and pious intentions will give way to a definite programme. . . . . The problem of medical relief not only in Madras, but throughout India, deserves to be seriously taken up. And, in our opinion, it can be so seriously taken up only if the indigenous system of medical relief comes for its share of appreciation at the hands of the Government. As it is, we have only a limited number of colleges. A fully equipped college and hospital requires crores of rupees. We have no money. One of the problems before the Government is the equipment of a large number of young men with enough knowledge of medicine to handle village sickness. We ask whether Government is ever serious about an entire system of medical relief for India; if it is, then we insist that the Ayurvedic and the Unani systems should be organised by the Government. Then a very large number of hospitals could be established in a short time; then a system of medical relief would have come into existence that will really meet the situation."

Home Rule for India.

25. In a leader on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 9th August, says:—"The idea conveyed by Home Rule for India is the complete control of the Government by the people themselves, of civil administration and finance. There is no suggestion of what is to be done with the military administration. Who is to have control of the army, its equipment and training? Those who talk of India being to-day ready for Home Rule do not realise this important part of the duty of the State. They imagine that India can rule herself without this essential preparation, without an army of defence. No sensible man has ever suggested that the military branch of the administration can be transferred at once into the hands of the people, for the obvious reason that, with our experience and knowledge of the military, it is impossible for us to assume the military administration of the country. . . . . This is the essential question to which no Home Ruler seems to have paid any serious attention. What is to be done for our defence? The shores of India have to be defended by the British Navy to which we do not make an adequate contribution. Nor is it pretended that we maintain a Navy to guard the shores of India. The naval protection which Britain gives to India is essential for India's existence; and for the military defence we must have an army able to provide against every internal trouble. . . . . We have to take things as we find them, and are we able, at present, to maintain order in the country without the assistance of the army under the control of the British? It is indeed very comforting to think that somebody else will protect us while we are ruling. That is the idea of our advanced politicians who say that we are to-day fit for Home Rule."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1916.

The Indian Civil Service.

26. In a leader under the heading "Pros and Cons again," New India, of the 9th August, remarks:—"We return to the little book called Pros and Cons to learn what it has to say about the Indian Civil Service. There is such a charming naivete of ignorance about the writer, his 'Pro' is so entirely different from the Indian demand, his insistence on the 'Bengali Babu' so comic, that one can but laugh at the presentation, till one remembers that it will deceive thousands of equally ignorant Englishmen. Here lies the pressing necessity for the British 'League for Home Rule in India' and its educative propaganda in England. The British public is left in absolute ignorance as to Indian feeling, and unless a change in the English work is immediately brought about India will be left out of everything at the end of the war. . . . . And this insolence (i.e., Lord Curzon's remark that the 'Corps d'elite must always be English') is repeated by this ignorant writer in a form the more insulting that it is represented as Indian. My Lord Willingdon tries to prevent political discussion in his unfortunate Province during the war, but, as we are not subject to him in Madras, we take leave to say that while he seeks to bar political discussion among Indians, and allows English books to circulate which misinform the British public, he is acting with grave partiality. . . . . This is the poisonous stuff scattered over the Empire by thousands of these shilling booklets, and this 'third impression' of the fifth edition is written by 'W.T.S. Sonnenschein, M.A. (Oxon), Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxon'. People will buy and read it, and take for granted that these despicable 'Pros' represent India's wishes, and the insulting 'Cons' British opinion concerning her. If we speak the truth here in India, we are branded as seditious. The editor of this paper is under security, after twenty-three years of work in India, striving to recommend the Empire to those smarting under injustice, and to represent the British as lovers of freedom and justice, despite the vagaries of Anglo-Indians. She has dared to express openly and frankly, without disguise, the real feelings of Indians, for only thus can India win her equal place in the Empire.

"For this, she has been struck at as seditious by security imposed on her paper, and by the gross insult of the Government of Bombay, that she is, or is going to be—they do not know which!—'prejudicial to public safety'. It is Lord Willingdon's acts which are clearly and definitely 'prejudicial to public safety'. To mention but one such act, the refusal to give Mr. Tilak a passport, when he needs to go to England to prosecute his suit against Sir Valentine Chirol. Is not such a denial of natural justice to a sorely persecuted man, the recognised leader of the high-spirited Maratha race, an act far more 'prejudicial to public safety' than any, committed or going to be committed, by Mrs. Besant?"

27. New India, of the 10th August, remarks:—"The latest Anglo-Indian move is to damn the Commander-in-Chief in India and Sir Percy Lake for the present situation in Mesopotamia. No evidence is produced in support of so momentous a decision, though one journal in Bombay asks us to rely on the inferences it has found it possible to draw from the complaints of persons returning from Mesopotamia. . . . . If officers of the standing of a Commander-in-Chief are to be dismissed because a writer is led to desire it on the strength of reports from men who have been sent away by him because of incapacity, certainly Germany cannot ask for better Allies! The two Generals interviewed will be the last to praise the capacity of their superiors who have dismissed them for their blunders, and if the Anglo-Indian press is to raise an agitation on such worthless information the less said about its patriotism the better. . . . . It may be that the British forces have not been used to the greatest advantage, but where are the proofs to that effect? And if they are not forthcoming, except in the complaints of officers punished for incompetency, is it fair in the midst of the war to demand such revolutionary changes as the dismissal of the Commander-in-Chief in India, who is after all acting as a subordinate of the War Office? To be fair to them, we have to add that some Anglo-Indian papers are also suggesting another alternative, viz., that the Governor-General in Council should scrutinise every one of his decisions. And these are the very oracles who have been crying themselves hoarse over the imaginary fear that the British Cabinet was now and then disastrously interfering with the activities of the Army and the Navy!"

Mesopotamia and the Anglo-Indian press.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1916.

28. Referring to the advice given to the leaders of Bengal by the Amrita Bazaar Patrika to unite and extricate Bengal from the nightmare caused by the extraordinary activity of the Criminal Investigation Department, New India, of the 10th August, remarks:—"The great work to be done in Bengal at the present moment is to check and to extirpate anarchism. The methods of the Government, the utilising of repressive measures, are bound to fail. They have been tried long in the past and the fate predicted by Gokhale and others for them has thoroughly overtaken them. The Government seem to incline to listen to the howlings of the Anglo-Indian press, and to persist in their foolish course. It becomes the duty of the Indian leaders to find a way which would help the decrease and ultimate death of anarchism. One sure way is the self-government propaganda on an extensive scale. . . . . The attention of young Bengal has to be arrested: lectures and discussions on Home Rule, giving them leaflets and pamphlets for free distribution, allowing them to hold debates on the subjects pertaining to self-government; in short, any work which will satisfy their enthusiasm, and find an outlet for their bubbling energy is good."

Anarchism in Bengal and Home Rule for India.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1916.

29. Referring to the comments of the Leader (Allahabad) on the criticism of the Statesman (Calcutta), on Mr. Webb's propaganda, New India, of the 10th August, says:—"The Government commits a mistake, sometimes failing to grasp the strength or otherwise of popular feeling and opinion, sometimes because they believe in the fabrications supplied by the Criminal Investigation Department, and they later on realise the error of their ways. Then this maxim (i.e., the maintenance of prestige) comes into play, and works its mischief to the detriment of the popularity of the Government. Madras has had a good instance of this in the security demanded from this paper under the Press Act. Everyone practically admits that its imposition was a blunder. The policy and the style of the paper remain absolutely unchanged. Yet the Government have not the sense to take off the security, and so put an end to a situation which is injurious only to themselves."

The training of midwives.

30. The Indian Patriot, of the 10th August, states:—"We publish elsewhere an important Government order on the training of widows and employment of lady health visitors; and we most heartily congratulate the Government on the steps proposed to be taken. . . . . The Government all these years was content to leave the population to the care of the hereditary widwife. It is now no longer the case. The responsibility has been realised, and as a beginning, steps have been taken to train more midwives in hospitals. We look forward to the best results from this resolution, and have no doubt that the public and the local bodies would take the fullest advantage of the scheme."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1916.

Enlistment of educated Indians.

31. New India, of the 11th August, observes:—"The Madras Mail offers to 25 Indian educated gentlemen, of military age and University education, entrance into 'a distinguished corps', unnamed, to train them together and send them to the front. Presuming that the editor of the Madras Mail has military authority to make the offer, we may ask what is to be the position of the 25 in the distinguished corps? Are they to be sepoys? Are these educated gentlemen to be classed with the ordinary Tommies? And what will the empire gain by 25 men? Indians do not want to fight as privates for amusement; they wished to be enrolled in regiments, by thousands, to make up the deficiency in men. This patronising offer to put 25 refined Indian gentlemen into the ordinary army as a 'group' will hardly attract. . . . . We are not begging for a few places. It matters little to the Indian nation, if even a thousand young men are permitted to enlist as a special case. What is demanded, and demanded as a birthright, is that, subject to the usual rules of enlistment, Indians should be accepted for the army, and no barrier, racial or any other, should be thrown in their way, even in the matter of entering the commissioned ranks."

HINDU, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 11th August, says:—"While the solicitude of the Madras Mail which acts instead of filling the air with lamentations is commendable, so far as it purports to be in the interests of the educated Madrasis, the latter may, we fear, be inclined to smell a rat in the mystery with which the matter is invested, in the medium of communication through which such a valuable proposal is made public and in the prefatory remarks with which it is announced. Why should the Commanding Officer not put himself in direct communication with the educated Madrasis, and is the Madras Mail the journal which is most in touch with them? . . . . The previous expressions of opinion by our contemporary on the topics mentioned above are hardly consistent with the sudden anxiety of the Madras Mail to afford the educated Madras an opportunity to participate in the war. If the conversion is sincere we shall welcome the change, but it is not impossible that the Madras Mail is trying to be clever in its own superior way. Saul may be also among the prophets, but if it is only a masquerade for ulterior motives the public will know how to treat the Madras Mail's activities in its behalf."

The Local Boards and Municipalities Acts Amendment Bills.

32. The Hindu, of the 9th August, writes:—"The public in the Madras Presidency are not in a position to know what progress has been made with the amending Bills to the Local Boards and Municipalities Acts. Sometime ago we were told that the drafts were ready, but since then, the Government have received numerous opinions on the subject in response to their invitation. The drafts are, we suppose, being revised, in the light of these further opinions. It will be very convenient if a prēcis of these criticisms and suggestions is published for the information of the public interested in the subject before or side by side with the promised publication of the amending Bills. As we have repeatedly remarked, the procedure followed by the local Government in this matter is circuitous, and has resulted in inordinate delay. In most other Provinces, mixed committees of officials and non-officials have been promptly appointed to consider the improvements to be effected in the Local Self-Government Acts. The Government of Madras have, however, not as much faith in committees as in their own officers and the result is public dissatisfaction."

IV.—Native States.

33. The West Coast Spectator, of the 3rd August, states:—"It is mentioned in Cochin official circles that an Assistant Diwan will shortly be appointed to afford Mr. Bhore relief. Even the name of the candidate for the new post is freely mentioned. We have to express the hope that His Highness the Raja will not be so hasty as to take this step which must be regarded as unwarranted. Public business has not increased since Mr. Banerjee's departure, and nobody will believe that a State, which is no bigger than a taluk in British India, requires an elaborate and cumbrous administrative machinery. The newly-started Cochin Mahajana Sabha might very well take up this subject for consideration."

The proposed Assistant Diwanship for Cochin.

34. The Karnataka, of the 5th August, writes:—"Mysore politics, for the present, is mostly appointment squabble,—that is, gutter politics. But the passers-by have a right to protest against the gutter being rendered more odious than it is. As if with a vengeance to set at naught the 'reactionary' advocates of economy, Government have, it is said, recently granted increases of salary to some of their high officers. The gentlemen concerned may deserve all that and much more. But that is not the whole point. The 'paying' capacity of the people should also receive some consideration; and it is mockery—not logic—to say that an increase of salary is of necessity followed in every case by a proportionate increase of efficiency. The fact is that there is now a general upward tendency so far as the emoluments of high offices are concerned; and promotion, like sea-water, only renews thirst for more."

Karnataka, Bangalore City, Aug. 5th, 1916.

Gutter politics in Mysore.

35. The West Coast Spectator, of the 5th August, remarks:—"It is a very interesting story that comes to us from Cochin. We are told that the powers behind the throne are making frantic attempts to get a certain gentleman, compulsorily retired from public service, appointed to a high office. We shall not be surprised if the unexpected happens, for, the present administration lacks that strength and spirit that characterised the late."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 5th, 1916.

Intrigue in Cochin.

36. The Hindu, of the 8th August, writes:—Ill-advised police prosecutions on flimsy grounds appear to be launched rather frequently now-a-days. Recently such a case was decided in the Mysore Chief Court by Mr. Justice T. Paramasiva Ayyar and Mr. Justice Mir Humza Hussain in which Mr. B. Garudachar, an Advocate of Shimoga, was charged by the local Police with having received Rs. 50 which was alleged to be part of stolen property. The facts, as disclosed in evidence, were that Mr. Garudachar was engaged by one Manja, the accused in a theft case, and that he received from the accused Rs. 50 as his fees which the prosecution alleged was stolen property. The District Magistrate of Kolar passed an order framing a charge against Mr. Garudachar which the learned Judges of the Chief Court quashed and discharged the accused Advocate. . . . . There can be no stronger grounds for an enquiry into the conduct of the Mysore Police, and we trust the Government of His Highness the Maharaja will not lose this opportunity of investigating into the activities of a department which is as liable to become oppressive as it is capable of doing good."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 22nd, 1916.

Indians in South Africa.

37. The Swadesamitran, of the 22nd July, writes:—When the struggle between the Government and the Indians in South Africa was brought to an end by a compromise, many among the Indians there thought that the terms of the compromise were not sufficiently comprehensive and that justice would require that all the grievances of the Indians should be redressed once for all. The soundness of this view has now been proved by the unjust way in which the authorities there are using their powers to the detriment of the Indians. The present grievance of the Indians is in connection with the trade licenses granted to them. Their complaint is that the authorities are refusing, not only to grant them fresh licenses to trade in the colony but also to renew old licenses. There is nothing surprising in the officials doing so, for it is not to their interest as white men to allow the Indians to compete with them. But it is really strange that they should do this under cover of law. An Act passed in 1912 by the Colonial Government empowers the municipalities in the colony to insist upon any Indian vending or storing foodstuffs, taking out a license therefor every year, and also vests in these municipalities themselves the discretion of determining whether an Indian deserves to have the license or not. In a subsequent decision of the Supreme Court, it has been laid down that there is no appeal against the action of the municipalities in this matter, beyond a reference to the Magistrate. Thus it is an arbitrary power that has been given to these municipalities, and there is no wonder that composed wholly of Europeans they are using it to prevent the Indians from settling in the colony as merchants. When it is admitted all round that the Indians are now rendering yeoman service to the British Empire, it is not fair that they should be treated like this in South Africa. Will the British statesman and Lord Chelmsford turn their attention to this matter and try to set it right?

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

Indian coolies in Ceylon.

38. Referring to the report submitted by a committee appointed by the Ceylon Government to enquire into the condition of the Indian coolies in Ceylon, the Swadesamitran, of the 24th July, says:—The object with which this committee was appointed was to find out the truth in the complaint that the Indian coolies were being badly treated by the planters. But it chose to enquire only 10 coolies, while it examined 35 Europeans. Nothing is said in the report of the committee as to what was stated by the coolies; but the statements made by the Europeans are described in detail. Many of the latter are the superintendents of plantations. How can they be expected to admit the existence of defects in their management? But in certain cases even they had to admit it and to account for it also. The causes of the high rate of mortality among these coolies are stated to be want of sanitation and hunger. We have not heard of labourers in India having died of hunger. The report shows that the coolies rarely communicated their grievances to the superintendents. But there is nothing wonderful in this. They could reach the superintendents only through the kanganis, to whom they were indebted in numerous ways and who were directly responsible for the sufferings of the coolies. Apart from the one-sided nature of the report of this committee, there is no gainsaying the fact that one of the causes for hundreds of Indians dying of hunger and disease in Ceylon is that no efforts are being made in India to improve their condition. It is the same hope, that of making money, that is attracting both the Europeans and the Indians to Ceylon. The former succeed in their object, while the latter fail. The planters cannot carry on their work without the coolies. Cannot the coolies eke out a livelihood without the planters? It is for the Ceylon Government and the planters there to ponder over this question and see that the coolies are treated with kindness. If they will not bestow any thought on this subject, our Government should interfere and make them do so.

39. The Hindu Nesan, of the 28th July, writes:—Mr. Lloyd George, the present War Minister, is said to have declared that the Allies would gain a complete victory within a few months. But the trend of events seem to indicate the prolongation of the war. The recent victory of the Allies at Pozieres was gained at an enormous loss of life and ammunition. During the time taken by the Allies to take Pozieres, the Germans might have entrenched their positions and this may delay the progress of the Allies. Perhaps the War Minister could have come to the conclusion that the war would come to an end soon from the fact that the Germans are gradually getting exhausted. But, as we stated above, the actual events do not seem to justify this conclusion.

The war in Europe.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 28th, 1916.

40. In the course of a leaderette on the second anniversary of the war, the Desabhimani, of the 23rd July, says:—The Allies being superior to the enemy in the strength of their forces, they are able to prolong the war to any extent. England enjoys naval supremacy over the whole world and prevents foodstuffs from reaching the enemy. The enemy cannot afford to fight so long as the Allies. There is already evidence that the Germans are growing weaker and weaker. France and England, on the one hand, and Russia, on the other, are acting on the offensive, and are regaining their lost positions. As righteousness must win, it is certain that the Allies will win the victory sooner or later. India is eagerly expecting such a result.

The war.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, July 23rd, 1916.

The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 10th August, in its news columns, writes:—A correspondent writes that at the outbreak of the war Lord Morley, Lord Cotarney (sic) and several other leaders hinted that it would be disastrous to enter the war and when their word was not heeded they resigned, and that the consequences of it are becoming evident now.

The war.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 10th, 1916.

The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 9th August, in a leading article, referring to the recent Russian successes, gives an optimistic review of the situation, and thereupon referring to the reports of the inhuman treatment of prisoners by the Germans, observes:—It is urged in some quarters that Germany should be threatened with retaliatory measures at the close of the war. Such threats can be of no avail whatever. If we should treat kindly and justly those whom we have taken prisoners, the enemy will be roused to a sense of shame. Christ Himself has taught that we should conquer our enemies by kindness. If the Christian races should adhere to the precepts of their own religion, all the present troubles would be sure to disappear.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 9th, 1916.

41. The Suvarnalekha, of the 1st August, has the following under this heading:—Pondicherry, July 26th.—Everybody was gratified yesterday to learn that the troops sent from here to the front reached Marseilles safely on the 24th instant. The Captain on board the Dupleix has wired this message.

The Government asked those who came here from Singapore to return to Singapore as their services were not required.

SUVARNALEKHA, Tanuku, Aug. 1st, 1916.

42. In a leading article under this heading, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 9th August, after dwelling at some length on the magnitude of the operations in the several theatres of war and the devastation already caused, proceeds to remark:—There is no parallel in history to this inordinate thirst of war-goddess who remains unsatiated even after she has been drinking human blood for two whole years. The Empires of Austria and Turkey are on the verge of extinction. Belgium has been wiped out of existence and yet the fighting is going on as vigorously as ever. Countless heroes were ground down by the war-goddess. Immeasurable quantities of munitions were wasted on either side. Large numbers of troops were captured. Millions of women were rendered destitute. Prices have become tripled and still the war-god is as bloodthirsty as ever. Millions of destructive machines are being manufactured for human sacrifices. But what if? During the last four or five weeks the Allies have been winning steadily. From every theatre we have reports of German reverses. We may be sure that the time for British triumph is fast approaching. What wonder that a Power which fought for the independence of the smaller nations and remained faithful to its promises to the Allies should win! Is it possible that one who so selflessly fights for others can fail to win? We, therefore, pray that this terrible war may come to an end before the close of its third year, that the wickedness of the Germans who use all their science for butchery may be crushed for all time and that mother India who has been so loyally placing her heroic sons and her wealth and resources at the feet of the war-goddess may gain independence under the protection of the British Empire.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore, Aug. 9th, 1916.

BHARATI, Bellary, Aug. 4th, 1916.

The Bharati, of the 4th August, also has a similar leading article on the devastation caused by the war and the near prospect of triumph for the Allies.

MALAYALAM PAPERS, August, 1916.

The war anniversary.

43. In praying for the success of the Allies in the war on the occasion of its second anniversary, most of the Malayalam papers note with pleasure that the Allies have now begun to take the offensive on all fronts, and that they are making progress everywhere.

CHAKRAVARTI, Cochin, July 29th, 1916.

The Sharif of Mecca and the Indian Mussalmans.

44. Referring to the efforts of the Sharif of Mecca to free it from the yoke of Turkey, the Chakravarti, of the 29th July,* says:—Indian Mussalmans unanimously condemn the action of the Sharif. The Englishman says that the publication of their adverse comments thereon has been prohibited.

A contrary report seems to have been sent to the newspapers in England, namely, that the Indian Muhammadans rejoice at the action of the Sharif in trying to free Mecca from the yoke of Turkey. This telegraphic message is an entirely false one.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 5th, 1916.

Germany's unworthy fleet.

45. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 5th August, writes:—Germany was very boastful and proud of her Fleet. It was a case of "the drum sounds fine at a distance." In the present war in Europe everything has turned out in accordance with the saying—

> The beats of the heart seemed loud inside.
> But, when the heart was opened, not a drop of blood came forth.

It has been observed by everybody that all this talk was simply to make people afraid, but at last the secret is out! The Allies, on the contrary, are proud of the powerful Fleet possessed by England, the dread of which has kept the German Fleet skulking behind Heligoland not daring to come out. It is afraid, if it were to advance a couple of feet it would be confronted with the forces which would compass its destruction. Who is the owner of this powerful Fleet at the sound of whose name the Kaiser and his naval advisers are shaking in their shoes? It is our British Government whose flag is flying all over the world and whose Fleet has been famous for its supremacy for centuries. It is therefore right and proper that we should be extremely proud of it. Further, we are proud of being the subjects of such a powerful Government whose naval strength makes the whole world tremble.

The history of the naval power of Britain should be enquired from Philip the King of Spain, how he, in spite of his Armada, suffered at the hands of the British Fleet It should also be ascertained from Napolean Bonaparte and his colleague Marshall Ney. The spirit of the former may still be trembling because of the British naval power. We should next ask the Kaiser and his colleagues about it (the British naval power).

* Received this week.

Had not Great Britain, whose object is not to derive any material benefit but to efface tyranny from the face of the world, joined in the war, what a great commotion Germany would have created today and how happy and free she would have been! Within the next few days Germany's fate will be sealed according to the saying—

One will be rewarded according to one's works.

(a) Police.

46. In a note the Chakravarti, of the 5th August, points out that the Criminal Investigation Department officers are now dogging Mr. Arundale, who has made arrangements for the education of the people in the matter of self-government, and asks whether the Government have established this department with the object of shadowing leaders of people who work for the good of the country, instead of tracing out perpetrators of grave crimes.

The Criminal Investigation Department and Mr. Arundale.

Chakravarti, Cochin, Aug. 5th, 1916.

47. After a reference to his connection, first, with the Vande Mataram, and then, with the Bengalee, and to his deportation for a time, the Keralodayam, of the 8th August, points to the arrest and subsequent release of Mr. Chakravarti, the present sub-editor of the Bengalee, in connection with the recent murder of the Deputy Superintendent of Police, and says:—Yet he is arrested again in the name of the new "Defence of India" Act. How can it be thought that this quiet man, working in the office of a reputed newspaper, is an anarchist?

Arrest of Mr. Chakravarti.

(b) Courts.

48. The Andhraprakasika, of the 29th July, is surprised to learn that the post of Persian Hindustani Translator in the High Court which has fallen vacant will be filled by an outsider from Northern India. It is to be regretted that in so filling up the vacancy, the authorities concerned are overlooking the claims of the men on the spot who are competent to fill the post. The paper hopes that the Hon'ble Justice Abdur Rahim will do justice in the matter.

Persian Hindustani Translator.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, July 29th, 1916.

49. Referring to a memorial sent by the people of the Pulivendla taluk, Cuddapah district, the Andhrapatrika, of the 7th August, says:—The Pulivendla taluk is notorious for its crime. In such a taluk, nothing can be more disastrous than to appoint Revenue officers as Magistrates and make the constable all-powerful, and there can be no more powerful means than this to give a free hand to the offenders. This state of things is unbearable. If the presence of a Magistrate is unnecessary at a place like Pulivendla where people are robbed in open daylight there is no need for a Magistrate anywhere. We trust that the Government will appoint a Magistrate at Pulivendla and bring peace and happiness to the people.

A Sub-Magistrate for Pulivendla.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1916.

(d) Education.

50. Referring to the proceedings of this meeting, the Swadesamitran, of the 22nd July, observes:—We are really glad that it was decided at this meeting to revert to the old system of a course of two years for the B.L. examination, and it reflects credit on the Senate that it readily consented to change a system which was brought into force only last year.

The special meeting of the Senate.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 22nd, 1916.

Continuing its comments on this subject, the Swadesamitran, of the 24th July, says:—The result of the discussion regarding the resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar that the percentage of pass marks in the last Intermediate examination should be reduced has been very disappointing indeed to the large number of students who were awaiting it anxiously. It is curious that the Vice-Chancellor should have allowed Mr. Moffat's proposition to be voted upon, ignoring the original proposition. It is for legal heads to decide what is the position of Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's proposition now, as he did not withdraw it and it was not also voted upon and thrown out.

Swadesamitran, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 24th July, also expresses disappointment at the way in which Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's proposition was allowed to hang in the air, while Mr. Moffat's proposition, which had no connection whatever with the former, was voted upon.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 25th, 1916.

The Swadesamitran, of the 25th July, comes back to this subject and observes:—Apart from the disappointment caused to the numerous students who were anxiously awaiting the result of the meeting, the discussion at the meeting has brought out that the cause of the heavy slaughter in the Intermediate examination should be either that the papers set for this examination are unnecessarily difficult or that the students obtaining the School leaving certificates are unfit to enter the college classes. The School Final examination is conducted by the Government and success in it makes one eligible for entry into Government service and also for admission into the college classes. If it is now stated that the majority of the students who pass this examination are not fit to join the Intermediate class, it only proves that the education for the school final examination is useless. What is after all the Intermediate examination? It is only a gate way, as it were, for the third year's course in the college classes, and it has no independent status We really cannot understand the necessity for an examination in the middle of the four years' course in a college. If an examination is necessary at the end of the second year, it is necessary even at the end of the first year. We will advocate the abolition of the Intermediate examination altogether, as it is not fair to block the students half way in their college course.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, July 30th, 1916.

University examinations.

51. The Desabhimani, of the 30th July, says:—Those who have noted the discussion in the meeting of the Senate on the question of the recent Intermediate examination will be struck with the idea that it will be most wise for boys to give up the present-day education, which undermines their health, and go in for other pursuits. Even when the Hon'ble Sir Sivaswami Ayyar was appointed Vice-Chancellor of the University, we expected that the University would be reduced to its present state. When the resolution of an influential person and High Court Judge like the Hon'ble Justice Seshagiri Ayyar was not discussed and put to the vote, it is idle to expect any justice at all at the hands of the University. The Indian members fell under the spell of Mr. Moffat. The Vice-Chancellor, perhaps, feared that the European members may be offended and having abandoned his "commonsense", earned the ridicule of the world. But it is the boys and their parents that are the losers. Such a deplorable state of things is possible only in the Madras University. As stated by Dr. Nair, the sooner the University is closed, the better. O, Andhras! Cannot you at least wake up? Of what use is your proficiency in English, which is a foreign language? Can you ever become Englishmen? No. You forget your native tongue and bring dishonour to your race. There is no harmony between the masses who do not know English and yourself. How long would you be insulted by the Missionaries with terms like rickshaw coolies? If there is any national honour left in you, give up the present education which is weakening the nation, and resort to national education. Why do you spend your money for English education? You will not get justice at the hands of this University. You must learn a lesson from the slaughter in this year's Intermediate examination, or you will be ruined. The future of any country depends on the self-endeavour of its people. The truth of this will be evident to those who have any knowledge of history.

Intermediate class students.

52. The Hitakarini, of the 30th July, learns that the Rev. Mr. Macphail called the Intermediate class students rickshaw coolies and addresses him saying:—"Sir, is your envy quenched? Now be at peace". It then addresses the students and says:—"O, Students! You are unfortunate in every way. It is the misfortune of the country that you, the future leaders, should be put to such straits.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 30th, 1916.

Sir H. Butler and education.

53. In the course of its leader on the subject of education, the Andhrapatrika, of the 5th August, says:—So long as Lord Hardinge held the reins of the Government of India, most of the acts of the Government of India brought happiness, cheerfulness, and joy to the people. We cannot say that since Lord Chelmsford assumed the Viceroyalty of India, his rule has not been marked by any such act. But no act of his can be compared to acts such as the annulment of the partition of Bengal, the transfer of the capital to Delhi, the grant of fifty lakhs to education, the condemnation of the unjust treatment of the Indians in the Colonies, and so on. Lord Willingdon, Lord Pentland and Lord Carmichael, who were liberal-hearted in the time of Lord Hardinge, have now adopted a short-sighted policy. . . . . Sir H. Butler has recognised the necessity of co-operation between the officials and the non-officials for a successful administration of education in this country, and has begun to put that idea into practice in his Province of Burma by constituting Divisional Committees. If these committees should work in the spirit in which they are constituted, it is plain that education will make rapid progress in Burma. It will be well if the rulers of other Provinces also follow the example of Sir H. Butler.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 5th, 1916.

A circular of the Calcutta University.

54. Referring to the circular of the Calcutta University insisting upon the students' residing in college hostels, the Chakravarti, of the 5th August, points out that, as the students have to pay a high rent for rooms in college hostels, many of them will have to discontinue their studies.

CHAKRAVARTI, Cochin, Aug. 5th, 1916.

"Education in the Madras University."

55. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 2nd August, writes:—When we observe the examination results of last year, we cannot help saying that our University does not approve of higher education and desires to reduce it. We cannot understand and it is really incomprehensible why the University should be so severe and ungenerous towards higher education when our benign Government grants lacs of rupees to the Educational Department and spends large sums of money on the education and instruction of the people.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

Every educated person is well aware that the teaching of grammar is essential and fundamental in learning any language. That is to say, if one learns grammar thoroughly one becomes a master of the language. Ever since the Madras University has excluded the teaching of grammar from the course of study, there has been a great falling off in English and the difficulties of acquiring a correct knowledge of this language have greatly increased.

It is said that some time ago there was a discussion in Oxford as to the advisability of excluding Latin from the curriculum. In spite of the fact, however, that the whole of the science faculty favoured the proposal, Latin was retained. There the exclusion of even one language was not accepted.

The procedure adopted by the learned Fellows of the Madras University is regarded with great regret for, instead of affording facilities, it creates difficulties in the matter of existing examinations.

It is also observed with regret that Muhammadans and Hindus in their keenness for English education, neglect their religious studies and in some cases do not give even so much as a thought to their mother tongue!

We have stated plainly in these columns that parents in their desire for English education send their boys to school without first teaching them religion, with the result that the latter utterly disregard the claims of the teacher upon their respect and obedience.

The writer hopes that the University authorities will direct their attention to the question of religious instruction and amend their curriculum accordingly.

(g) Forests.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1916.

The Forest department.

56. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th August, says:—In the Forest department, a sum of Rs. 3,30,632 was disbursed to officers as salaries in the year 1915–16. Of this amount, the Indians got less than a fifth. Will the officials who profess to be liberal-minded, and the Anglo-Indian editors who are not tired of singing the praises of the Indian bureaucracy, note this and answer their conscience? Will the rulers find some means to stop this gross violation of the claims of Indians by the bureaucrats at least after the war? That means cannot be any other than self-government.

(h) Railways.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakottai, July 17th, 1916.

Railway administration in India.

57. The Vaisyamitran, of the 17th July,* is against the management of railways in this country being taken over by the Government and says:—As the railways are under the management of private companies, we are in a position to complain to the Government, if there is any defect in their administration. If the management of the railways is transferred to the Government and if there is any defect in the administration then to whom are we to complain about it? Moreover, as long as the custom of leasing the management of railways to private companies exists, there is the possibility at one time or another of an Indian company having this lease. So mature consideration will show that it is better that the railways are managed by private companies than by the Government.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1916.

Inadequate supply of railway waggons.

58. Referring to the limited supply of waggons at the Rajahmundry Railway station, and the loss resulting to the merchants from a delay in the transmission of goods, the Andhrapatrika, of the 4th August, says:—Unless liberal-minded men like Sir William Meyer and Sir George Barnes enquire into the matter carefully, it is impossible that the troubles of merchants will ever end. Why should not the local authorities at Rajahmundry enquire into the grievances of the local traders and seek to redress them? If they are not able to do so, why should they not tell so? How long should the present unsatisfactory state of things continue?

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1916.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 8th August, refers to a telegram from Tenali complaining of an inadequate supply of waggons at that place and remarks:—The Railway officers say that there is no lack of waggons and that they are not in the wrong. Who will believe this?

CHAKRAVARTI, Cochin, Aug. 5th, 1916.

Indians and Railway servants.

59. In a note the Chakravarti, of the 5th August, points out that white-men and Railway servants are treating Indian passengers as if they were herds of cattle, and observes that it is to be apprehended that serious quarrels will arise between Railway officials and Indians, unless such injustices be at once put a stop to.

(k) General.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 21st, 1916.

Dr. Slater at the Coimbatore College.

60. Referring to the speech delivered by Dr. Slater on the occasion of the distribution of prizes at the Coimbatore Agricultural College, the Hindu Nesan, of the 21st July, observes:—One important statement in his speech, which we hail with satisfaction, is that the Government is bound to render pecuniary aid to the people in improving education, sanitation, agriculture and industries. When an expert in economics expresses this opinion, it will not do for the Government to ignore it. We hope the Provincial Governments will spend some thought over this pronouncement of

* Received in the current week.

Dr. Slater. While we are glad that Dr. Slater's opinion regarding the Government help to industries agrees exactly with that of the people, we are sorry to say that we cannot accept his view regarding the incidence of taxation. He says that, if the people expect the Government to be liberal in their expenditure on education, sanitation and other matters, they should not grudge to pay a larger some of money as taxes. Evidently Dr. Slater has not understood the argument of the popular leaders against an increase of taxation. It is not the increase in the amount collected as taxes, but the fact that they are levied in such a manner as to be a heavy burden on the poorer classes, leaving the rich unaffected that they take exception to. That the Indians are not at all against the Government collecting as much money as is required for its needs is proved by the fact that they have not demurred in the least even to the increase in the tax on salt, which is an article of daily consumption by them. Their complaint is specially against the land assessment which is revised every 30 years and which has proved to be a dead weight upon the poor agriculturists. Questions connected with the land-tax, the income-tax, the salt-tax and the like are too complicated for a new comer like Dr. Slater to understand easily, whatever special knowledge he may have on these subjects. So he will do well not to pronounce any independent opinion on these points, until he has understood the special conditions of this country.

Export of hides and skins by the Government.

61. Referring to the decision of the Government to take in its own hands the leather trade of this country, the Swadesamitran, of the 22nd July, suggests the appointment of an experienced Indian to test and decide the quality of the hides and skins offered by the merchants, as the appointment of a European for this purpose may give room for European firms being favoured specially to the detriment of Indian firms. It adds that if there is any difficulty in appointing an Indian to this post, the best course will be to leave the testing and valuation to be done at the port of landing in England, where it is sure to be done most impartially.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 22nd, 1916.

The arrest of the sub-editor of the Bengalee.

62. Adverting to the arrest, in Bengal, of the sub-editor of the Bengalee, the Swadesamitran, of the 22nd July, reports the Amrita Bazaar Patrika to have written as follows:—The glossary of the Criminal Investigation Department has a different meaning for the word sedition from what is given to it by the ordinary people. Why? Even the iron safe of Babu Surendranath Banerjea in the office of the Bengalee did not escape the search of the Police! It is really strange that they should have expected to find the stolen articles and several anarchist documents in this safe. We need not say that the arrest of the sub-editor of the Bengalee has cast a gloom throughout Bengal.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 22nd, 1916.

The Vijayavikatan, of the 27th July, reproduces the above article.

VIJAYAVIKATAN, Madras, July 27th, 1916.

A curious order.

63. The Swadesamitran, of the 24th July, refers to the action of Government of Bombay in having vetoed the election of Mr. Ibramijee Adamjee Peerbhai as the Muhammadan representative on the Bombay Legislative Council, on the ground that he secured votes by unfair means, and quoting the provisions of the regulations for the conduct of elections to the Legislative Councils in India and the rules regarding elections in England, observes:—The only charge brought against Mr. Peerbhai is that he offered to pay Rs. 2,000 to the Muhammadan Girls' School in the district of Kandesh and secured many votes in return for this promise. We do not see anything in the foregoing regulations and rules which will warrant a promise of donation to a Girls' School being deemed to be an unfair means of canvassing votes.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

India after the war.

64. The Hindu Nesan, of the 24th July, writes:—Though we cannot definitely say now what position will be allotted to India in the British Empire after the war, it is expected generally that there will be a change for the better in her condition. Any way, her condition after the war is bound to be better than her present one. The supervision and control now exercised by Britain over her should be released. It cannot but be admitted that, though India may not be given larger powers than what she now enjoys in internal administration, she should have at least a preponderating influence in it, especially in the matter of income and expenditure and of trade. It is these privileges that India hopes to have after the war. The Indians have now realised their true condition and feel that they are entitled to certain privileges by reason of their education and culture. This is known to the British statesmen and they know also that the Indians will go on agitating until they acquire the privileges to which they are reasonably entitled. While India is thus determined to have her desserts and while she believes that the time is not far off when her objects will be accomplished, we are really surprised to hear that there is a proposal to delegate to the Colonies certain functions of the British Government, especially in the matter of its control over the Indian administration. While India is aspiring to be raised to the position of the Colonies in the Empire, it will be curious indeed if the Colonies are allowed to share the rights and responsibilities of Great Britain in governing India. We hope there is no basis for this rumour. The Colonies have never been sympathetic towards India. We know how they have been maltreating the Indians, considering them to be a coloured race and even the British Government is not unaware of this. How can the Colonials, who would not allow the Indians to set foot in their land, be expected to rule over India satisfactorily!

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

The Lokopakari, of the 24th July, dwells upon the invaluable help which India has rendered to Britain in this war and expressing its surprise at her name not being mentioned at all in the conferences which are now held to consider about the readjustment of the different units comprising the British Empire after the war, observes:—The Boers of South Africa fought with the British and they have been granted swaraj. Ireland, in which there was a serious rebellion even when the war was going on is about to have swaraj. The uncivilised Phillipine Islands are going to have swaraj. But the highly civilised, loyal and quiet India has not yet obtained swaraj! The cry for swaraj is now ringing throughout the length and breadth of India. It cannot be suppressed hereafter. Every Indian is dreaming that his country, which is sacrificing her body, wealth and soul for securing the stability of the British Empire, will get numerous privileges after the war. It is the duty of the British Government to see that this dream becomes a reality.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 24th, 1916.

The Government and New India.

65. Referring to the warning said to have been sent to New India, that it should not write anything which may give umbrage to the Japanese, the Lokopakari, of the 24th July, says:—New India has been writing only about the unfair manner in which Japan was trading with India, stuffing her market with useless articles and deceiving the people into buying them. This complaint against Japan is being made by every paper. Why should the Government single out New India alone from among these and give a warning? It only serves to draw the special attention of the people to this paper and lead to their becoming discontented with the Government. It it not wise on the part of the Government to give room for such discontent.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 26th, 1916.

The Imperial Conference.

66. The Hindu Nesan, of the 26th July, hails with satisfaction the announcement made by Mr. Asquith that an Imperial Conference will be held soon and that representatives of India will be present therein and observes:—Important subjects are expected to be discussed at this conference, and it is, therefore, necessary that the points to be considered and the proposals to be made in it should be published in India, so that her representatives may ascertain public opinion thereon in this country and communicate the same to the conference. Now that the Prime Minister has definitely asserted that India would be represented in this conference, the question has to be decided as to who should represent India. Ever since the proposal of the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi that India should be represented in the Imperial Conference was accepted by the Viceroy, it has been pointed out that it is only non-officials and not officials that can truly represent India. As important questions will be considered by this conference, it is only such men in whom the Indian public have confidence that should be selected for this purpose. When the self-governing Colonies are allowed to have a larger number of representatives, it is not fair to send only one representative from India.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 26th, 1916.

In commenting upon this subject, the Swadesamitran, of the 26th July, dwells upon the necessity of a non-official Indian or Indians representing India at this conference and says:—It is our sincere conviction that none of the British Ministers can represent the needs of India. Whatever may be the future condition of India politically, she should have liberty in the matter of securing her pecuniary resources and dealing with the import and export duties. If India gets a control over her finance, there will be no necessity for import and export duties being levied in this country in view to the convenience of foreign countries or after obtaining the consent of the British Ministers. These duties will then be levied only to secure the interests of India. It cannot be gainsaid that in fixing the scale of these duties, the British Ministers have often being forced to listen to the importunities of British capitalists and that the Government of India had to act upon the instructions of the British Ministers even when they were detrimental to India. We had a glaring instance of it recently, when the proposal of the Government of India to raise the import duty on foreign cotton goods was vetoed by the Secretary of State. So, India can rise in the estimation of the world, only if she is free to look to her own interests in pecuniary matters, without caring for the convenience of any other country. The representative of India in the Imperial Conference should impress this view upon it.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, July 28th, 1916.

India and the Paris Economic Conference.

67. In the course of a leader under this heading, the Hindu Nesan, of the 28th July, dwells upon the necessity of India being represented in the second conference at least and the resolutions passed by the first conference being published in full in India.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, July 29th, 1916.

The representative members in the Legislative Council.

68. The Swadesamitran, of the 29th July, writes:—Our readers may remember the remark made by the Hon'ble Mr. V. K. Ramanuja Achariyar at the last meeting of the old Legislative Council that the representative members were not able to benefit the country in any way by their presence in the Council in consequence of the Government attaching no weight whatever to their views. The truth of this statement has been proved even recently in the case of the Bombay Legislative Council, when the Government declined to accept the resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Paranjpe without assigning any reason for it. It should be noted that the representative members have as much interest in the administration of this country as the official members. As a matter of fact, the former should be credited with a sounder knowledge of the condition of the country and as such their opinion deserves to be acted upon by the Government. The right of asking questions in the Council has been given to the representative members only for helping them to ascertain the details of administration, if necessary. If the Government hesitates to give satisfactory replies to these questions, how can the representative members be expected to take an interest in the administration? It looks as if the officials here are not anxious to give effect to the views of Lords Morely and Minto, who brought into existence the newly reformed Legislative Councils.

BHARATAMATA, Vizianagram, July 19th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

69. In commenting on the order of the Bombay Government against Mrs. Besant, the Bharatamata, of the 19th July (received on the 4th August) says:—The administrative policy of the Government is growing more and more repressive every day. Some of the bureaucrats are looking upon the leaders of the people with great suspicion. Mrs. Besant has been punished under the provisions of the Defence of India Act, which is a war measure. In the absence of a clear specification of the offence of which she is guilty, the order of the Bombay Government only tends to create suspicion and unrest in the minds of the people. We pray that the Bombay Government will publish the grounds on which they passed the order in question or rescind it altogether. By certain cruel acts of theirs for some time past our rulers have given room for the suspicion that they lack the vision required to discriminate between friend and foe, and so we are not confident that they will grant our prayer. But we have discharged our duty by making a humble representation to the Government as usual.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

Mr. Tilak.

70. Referring to the 60th birthday celebration of Mr. Tilak, the Andhrapatrika, of the 2nd August, says:—Mr. Tilak is the greatest of patriots. He heads the list of all educated men, and is the leader of nationalists. His fame has spread over the whole of India. It is a matter of common knowledge that he suffered imprisonment for the sake of the country.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

The Desamata, of the 2nd August, says:—Although everybody may not agree with Mr. Tilak on every point, it cannot but be admitted that he is a great patriot. It may be stated that nobody suffered so much as Mr. Tilak for his independent views. So long as the Government do not give the reason for refusing to give him a passport to go to England, we fear that the people will suspect partiality on the part of the Government to Sir Valentine Chirol.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, July 23rd, 1916.

Indian industries.

71. A correspondent to the Desabhimani, of the 23rd July, remarks that history does not bear testimony to anything being done by the British Government to prevent the decline of industries in India. He says that if heavy duties be imposed on imports, and indigenous articles are freed from all duties, there will then be no need to pay crores of rupees annually to foreigners, and the country will be in a prosperous condition.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, July 30th, 1916.

India's future.

72. The Desabhimani, of the 30th July, trusts that the rulers will note the recent utterances of such great men as the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Lyon of the Bengal Executive Council and the Hon'ble Mr. Chintamani of the United Provinces Legislative Council, constitute India as a partner of the empire after the war, and earn the gratitude of the Indians.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, July 29th, 1916.

Political agitation.

73. The Kistnapatrika, of the 29th July, says:—Many English statesmen have stated that India will get self-government like the one obtaining in England. But there is difference of opinion on the question whether she is to get it in the near or the distant future. It is undisputed that she will one day get it. The rulers wish to introduce the change step by step. But the ruled wish to have it as early as possible. As the rulers and the ruled are agreed so far as the goal is concerned, it is not right on the part of the former to show an intolerance of the constitutional agitation by the latter for the realization of the goal. What is it that Mrs. Besant and Mr. Tilak want? They wish to have now what Lord Morley and Lord Hardinge emphatically said India would have at some future date, if not at once. It is not known why they should be looked upon as foes of the empire and punished. The security proceedings against New India, the order of the Bombay Government prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering the Bombay Presidency, and binding Mr. Tilak over to keep the peace for one year are so many obstacles thrown in the way of political agitation. It will be well if the rulers once for all fix what political reforms the ruled may ask for. The Calcutta High Court and statesmen like Lord Morley and Lord Hardinge have said that it is not sedition to ask for self-government. The repressive actions of the Government may create suspicion in the minds of the people, which does no credit to the traditions of British justice. It is dangerous to try to prevent constitutional, lawful, and open political agitation. Only when the rulers are tolerant and sympathetic and afford full scope for the realization of the legitimate aspirations of the people, peaceful and beneficial popular agitation will spread, giving India a new life and a new splendour, Indian administration will be popular, and the British Empire will be undivided, complete, and most prosperous.

74. The Hitakarini, of the 30th July, reproduces from the Desamata of the 19th July the note on "Telegraphic News", already abstracted on page 1335 of the Weekly Newspaper Report.

Telegraphic news.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, July 30th, 1916.

75. The Andhrapatrika, of the 5th August, says:—Sir Seorge Barnes has given us the hope that at the Imperial Economic Conference India may be represented. We are in full agreement with the Times of India in saying that the deputation of some official of the India Office to the conference is no representation of Indian interests. Again no European merchant in India can be regarded as competent to represent India at the conference. The Government should either select an Indian merchant or leave it to the people to elect a proper representative.

Imperial Economic Conference.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 5th, 1916.

76. The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th August, notes with satisfaction the fact that the Government of Mysore is sending some men to foreign countries to receive commercial training, and asks why our Government could not have sent some Indians in like manner instead of sending Mr. Chadwick to Russia.

Mysore Government and commercial training.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1916.

77. The Andhrapatrika, of the 5th August, is gratified to learn that the Government of India have determined to raise a double company of infantry composed of Bengalis on precisely the same terms as are offered to the Indian army generally. It then remarks:—Even when the Indian army stays in India, it is not fair that the terms offered to it should differ from those offered to a European army. But it may be justified on the ground that European soldiers come from a distant country. It will be well if no such difference is observed at least when the army is sent on field service. May Lord Chelmsford do the needful in the matter!

An army of Bengalis.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 5th, 1916.

78. In an article referring to the London Times' criticism on Mrs. Besant's book on "Home Rule for India" published in England and the Amrita Bazar Patrika's rejoinder contending that the frequent recurrence of famines during recent years and the general rise in the prices disprove the Times' statement touching India's economic prosperity, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 5th August, writes:—It behoves us to find out the connection between Home Rule and the economic progress of a people. Would England have been in her present affluent condition but for Home Rule? Would she have had the ability to spend at the rate of 60 lakhs sterling a day in this terrible war? Would she have had the capacity to withstand the attacks of countries like Germany and Austria? It is Home Rule that has brought England worldwide power. If she would willingly grant the same privilege to India, the supremacy of the Empire will remain for all time. Under democratic rule India will effect great economic advancement and will be sincerely grateful and loyal to the British who helped her to such advancement. The economic progress of the people will bring them lasting power. If England should be pleased to consider these reasons and grant Home Rule to India, the latter ought to conduct the administration under the guidance of parliamentary bodies.

Home Rule for India.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 5th, 1916.

79. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 7th August, writes:—The Indian Moslems are clever folk. They have decided not to discuss the Home Rule question. For, if the Hindus should succeed in obtaining it, it will come to the Moslems too unasked. If the British should decide to deny it, the Moslems will have saved themselves the displeasure of Government. They avoid the discussion on the plea that it is a controversial matter.

The Moslems and Home Rule.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 7th, 1916.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Aug. 9th, 1916.

Anarchist activity in Bengal.

80. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 9th August, writes:—Some people speak of the increasing activities of the anarchists in Bengal as a blot on the fair name of the province. Are they not enough officers under the Government too who would lay down their lives to suppress the movement? The blot caused by the anarchists will be effaced by the fame of the men who would sacrifice their very lives for the good of the country. No purpose is served, therefore, by despising Bengal. How can a whole province be disgraced by the dastardliness of a few desperadoes who happen to kill their enemies? Which country is free from this type of men? Were not the lives of even some of the saintliest of men aimed at in Europe? Was not even the life of the goddess-like Victoria aimed at by some wretch? When the courts sentenced him to death, did not Queen Victoria cause him to be liberated by the exercise of her clemency? Would it not be more proper to say that England added to her glory through the Queen's extraordinary clemency rather than that the country's name was disgraced by the crime of this wretch? Which country is free from such wretches? It is the duty of the Government to reclaim these men to society. Some wise man has observed that in a country which is teeming with wicked men, those who are responsible for the growth of such wickedness should be hanged alongside with the wicked themselves. It behoves the Government to consider this argument.

Sampad Abhyudaya Mysore, Aug. 9th, 1916.

The students' strike at Singapore (sic).

81. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 9th August, writes:—The Anglo-Indian papers have begun to blame the students in connection with the strike at the Singapore (sic) College and are urging that they should be severely punished. This shows the extent to which high-handedness can go. A well-known jurist has said that if the students go wrong the teachers should be punished and if the people go wrong the Government should be punished. It is not easy to gainsay the truth of this remark. Love begets love and hatred, hatred. It is stated that some students pelted stones at some Professor, and some four students were caught hold of on suspicion and suspended by the school authorities, and that the other students went on strike as a protest against this action and the school was closed. This shows that the college authorities are wholly to blame for what has happened. If the latter were popular, the students would never have pelted stones at them; and even if any did, the others would have helped to detect them. The haughtiness of the college authorities and the suggestions of the Anglo-Indians that the students should be punished are both very surprising. It is to be hoped that the Government will appoint a committee to enquire into the truth of the situation.

Mysore Star, Mysore, Aug. 6th, 1916.

The encouragement of Indian industries.

82. Referring to Sir Thomas Holland's observations on the occasion of his visit to the South Indian Chamber of Commerce, the Mysore Star, of the 6th August, says:—Sir Thomas Holland's words are well worth the attention of all, particularly of the Government. He said that his visit to the Tata Iron Works showed him that there was no dearth of skilled labour in India, that the labourers who were like men from the jungles until recently were now better than English workmen, and that under proper organisation, with free education and proper feeding, the Indian labourer would make it possible to utilise all the raw materials available in the country. The same degree of appreciation from the lips of an Indian would scarcely have commanded much weight. It is hardly possible to over-rate the importance of this warm recognition of Indian capacity by so eminent an Englishman, who is besides an expert holding an appointment under Government. The Indians cannot be too grateful to Sir Thomas Holland for this hearty appreciation. The Indians were being hitherto constantly discouraged by some prejudiced folk who were never tired of telling them that India was not a country fit for industrial development, that the people were not capable of skilled labour, that power industries would never thrive in India and that the country was fit to be only an agricultural country and its people were fit to be only drawers of water and hewers of wood. These views have now been totally refuted by Sir Thomas Holland. He further encouraged us by saying that as a tropical country India was naturally better suited for industrial expansion, and that there was nothing to prevent the Indians from obtaining the same good results that were got in the western countries by their knowledge of science. It augurs well for the future of our industries that so liberal and sympathetic an expert has been appointed President of the present commission. The Government of India are prepared to carry out at the earliest opportunity any schemes which he may propose. There is no reason to fear that his recommendations will not be carried into practice. The South Indian Chamber of Commerce have, therefore, clearly pointed out the obstacles which have hindered our industrial progress in the past. They have laid stress on such matters as the absence of any duty on imports while there is a duty on the exports and the absence of State aid to industries. Sir Thomas Holland in reply has broadly hinted that protection within certain limits was necessary and further drawn the attention of the Indians to the importance of a wider diffusion of elementary and industrial education, of organising industrial exhibitions, and of sending Indian youths to foreign countries for industrial education. It is difficult to overrate the value of this advice. We hope that the Mysore Government which is just now exhibiting much feverish activity in regard to industrial advancement will immensely profit by Sir Thomas Holland's proposed visit to their province.

Sir Roger Casement's statement.

83. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 5th August, in a leading article on what it calls a "Wonderful speech", gives a summary of Sir Roger Casement's statement at the close of the trial, and thereupon remarks:—Even if the rulers are autocratic, it is not consistent with true citizenship to rebel in order to obtain privileges, instead of obtaining those privileges by loyal and constitutional means.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 5th, 1916.

Mr. Tilak and the Bombay Government.

84. Referring to the refusal of the Bombay Government to grant a passport to Mr. Tilak to proceed to England, the Manorama, of the 4th August, observes that, whatever his offences might be, they are not such as would justify the refusal of permission to him to proceed to England.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 4th, 1916.

In condemning the action of the Bombay Government in refusing a passport to Mr. Tilak to proceed to England, the Keralodayam, of the 8th August, expresses regret that the Bombay Government should persecute him, thus points out that, if his presence in India would, as the Government think, lead to trouble, it would be better to allow him to go to England, where he could do no harm, and hopes that the passport question will be reconsidered by the Government.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Aug. 8th, 1916.

"Moulana Abul Kalām Azād."

85. The Qaumi Report, of the 3rd August, writes:—The Bengalee brethren have submitted a memorial signed by 50,000 people to His Excellency Lord Carmichael requesting that Moulana Abul Kalām Azād may be permitted to return to his city on the grounds that he is a religious leader and his absence on the occasion of the Ī'd will be felt by Muhammadans in general.

It is strange that the Government of Lord Carmichael convicted him of being a political offender and expelled him from his beloved native place! But it is time now to take this case into consideration and to put an end to his anxieties. Whether the occasion of the Ī'd is appropriate or not, the principle of British justice demands that the unnecessary trials of all Mussalmans in custody should be terminated. The present state of affairs shows that Muhammad Ali, Shankat Ali, Zafar Ali and Hasrat, etc., had not inspired the community with any Satanic spirit or constructed any subterranean arms factory. If, God forbid! such a thing had happened, the smouldering embers would ere now have burst forth into flame and a dreadful commotion would have been created in the Mussalman world of India. If these people had not been State offenders, and had been punished as a precautionary measure by this time earth and sky would have been silent and no sensation would have been caused. Mirza Ghalib may speak for them—

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 3rd, 1916.

There must be a limit to punishment for chastening.
After all, we are sinners and not infidels!

Alas! The Ī'd has come and gone, but the term of those innocent persons has not yet expired. May God preserve their souls from a living death! It is hoped that a loyal Government will not reject the appeal of 50,000 loyal subjects.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1916.

86. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 4th August, writes:—The fourth August is such an important historical date that every one, whether educated or uneducated, knows that it is the date on which cruel, murderous, bloodthirsty, barbarous, savage Germany began her accursed world-wide destruction of human life. This is the very date from which the demon of destruction took possession of the Kaiser.

The fourth of August.

It is exactly two years since Britain, in her disinterestedness and sympathy, drew her mighty sword in defence of the independence of small States. The Kaiser's forces have stayed where they were stopped, but the recent British offensive has driven them still further back.

In honour of this anniversary we give expression to the hope that the troops will soon be released from the battlefield our King will be victorious, and the enemy vanquished.

III.—LEGISLATION.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

87. The Andhrapatrika, of the 2nd August, says:—In the new Legislative Council, the elected members number 21, while the official members and the members nominated by the Government number 23. From this it is plain that the number of members acting on behalf of the Government is greater than the number of elected members. It is impossible to expect much importance being paid to the voice of the public in a council where the principle of non-official majority exists only in name.

The Legislative Council.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 4th, 1916.

88. Referring to the rumour about the enforcement of the Defence of India Act in this Presidency, and to the recent meeting held at Madras in connection therewith, the Manorama, of the 4th August, points out that inasmuch as nothing has happened in this Presidency which calls for such a step, it would be a great pity, if this Act were brought into force here, and hopes that the rumour will prove to be a baseless one.

The Defence of India Act and the Madras Presidency.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Aug. 5th, 1916.

The Kerala Patrika, of the 5th August, also points out that inasmuch as this Presidency is a quiet and peaceful one, and as there seem to be no anarchists or dacoits here, there is no necessity for any extreme measures, so far as this province is concerned.

CHAKRAVARTI, Cochin, Aug. 5th, 1916.

Referring to the rumour that the "Defence of India" Act, which, it characterises as a devil that comes suddenly and unawares and devours the leaders of Indians, would be introduced into this Presidency, the Chakravarti, of the 5th August, observes that it is the Indian leaders whom with this weapon in hand the official classes are now chasing.

The Madras Presidency and the Defence of India Act.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Aug. 8th, 1916.

89. The Keralodayam, of the 8th August, rejoices that, as a result of the protests of the people in India, the Government have decided to remove the section in the Bill relating to the abolition of the right of the people to sue the Secretary of State, and observes that this shows that if Indians and Anglo-Indians work together, anything is capable of achievement.

Revenue administration in Mysore.

90. The Mysore Star, of the 6th August, in a leading article criticising the revenue administration of Mysore, complains of the enormous delay in the disposal of darkhast applications and of the general dilatoriness which characterises the administration.

Mysore Star, Mysore, Aug. 6th, 1916.

The Travancore Budget for 1092.

91. In reviewing the Travancore budget for the Malayalam year 1092 and the revised estimates for 1091, the Manorama, of the 8th August, draws attention to the satisfactory condition of the finances of the State.

Manorama, Calicut, Aug. 8th, 1916.

The Travancore Budget for 1092.

In the course of its review of the Travancore Budget for 1092, the Malayala Manorama, of the 9th August, observes that, if the British Government sympathise with the tea-planters of Devikulam, they ought to abolish the duties on tea in British ports rather than ask the Travancore Darbar to give up the new tax thereon, and thinks that, if the matter is properly placed before the Government, they will not insist upon it.

(a) Police.

1. The West Coast Spectator, of the 12th August, writes:—"We ourselves, and some of our correspondents, have of late been demanding an enquiry into the abnormal increase of crime in Malabar and the causes that have led to the failure of the police to detect several cases of grave crime like the Kavalpad murder and the Nambudiri shooting case, that still remain shrouded in mystery. The public is apt to attribute this to lack of police supervision and deterioration in detective capacity. We are afraid this allegation is not without foundation.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 12th, 1916.

Crime in Malabar.

"We can point out several cases that had gone up to the skies like rockets, collapsing like bundles of feathers in the Court of Sessions. Some of the recent cases of crime are so sensational, the perpetrators thereof so very reckless that we are afraid that a certain type of criminal stands in very little awe of law and authority. When there is an increase of crime the Inspector-General is fond of telling the Government and the public that economic causes are at the bottom.

"The cases reported from Kavalpad, Walluvanad and other places show that economic causes had nothing to do, at least so far as they were concerned. There must, therefore, be some other cause or causes which could be elucidated were a commission of enquiry inaugurated. Criminal lawyers, Magistrates and Judges ought to be in a position to give very valuable information."

New India, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 15th August, says:—"There is an abnormal increase of crime in Malabar and several acts of violence, including murder, remain undetected. The West Coast Spectator, commenting on this, says:

> The public is apt to attribute this to lack of police supervision and deterioration in detective capacity. We are afraid this allegation is not without foundation.

"The natural question of the public is: Where are the Criminal Investigation Department heroes? What are they doing? Perhaps it is not so generally known as it should be, that their legitimate work is sacrficed, while they watch harmless and law-abiding people, and leave thieves and murderers to go their own way. Madras is free from any taint of sedition and anarchism, but the all-knowing Criminal Investigation Department do not know that, and therefore spend their time and energy—for which by the way, the public pays—in noting down who pays a visit to Mrs. Besant at Adyar, whither she and her friends and co-workers go, and with whom they associate, etc. Naturally, they can find nothing where nothing exists, and, disappointed, they go on the more furiously with their spying. Will the heads of the department turn their attention to Malabar, and see if they can succeed in doing some legitimate work there in protecting the people, instead of running about after Will-o'-the-Wisps here?"

2. New India, of the 15th August, observes:—"We print on this page the account given by Mr. Arundale of the scandalous treatment he received in the United Provinces. It is well that our readers should see how an Englishman feels the treatment to which use has accustomed us. Here is a man who spent himself and his money for the Central Hindu College, and was adored by the students. They want to ask him to tea, and it is forbidden. By whom? As he says, he has been spied on as a criminal. But he is wrong. Were he a criminal, he would be left much more to himself. He is a lover of India's freedom, full of passionate devotion to the empire. That is the blackest of black crimes under the present regime."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1916.

New India, of the 16th August, states:—"There is one additional matter which makes even more odious than it would normally be the treatment of Mr. Arundale in the United Provinces. Before leaving England, he had been Commandant of a Military Hospital in London, and had been wearing himself out in the heavy work of organising and superintending the hospital. When he comes over here, he is hunted like a criminal. It would be difficult to find a more striking illustration of the difference between England and Anglo-India."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Aug. 15th, 1916.

3. The West Coast Spectator, of the 15th August, writes:—"Burma is still regarded as a backward province, but in several instances she has set an example to the other administrations. We find from the administration report of the City Police of Rangoon that action is systematically being taken in regard to houses of ill-fame. We are told that all blatant advertisements of, and allurements to, vice have ceased in the town and that some of the areas have been totally freed from this nuisance.

Houses of ill-fame.

"How we wish the Madras Police followed the example of benighted Burma! In every municipal town there are areas occupied by houses of ill-fame. In fact, in our town the vice grows unchecked and how grave it is will be evident from the fact that these houses flourish even near educational institutions.

"If we are correctly informed the police have ample power to segregate fallen women, but why this power is not utilised we cannot understand. Some of the localities are veritable pandemonia after night-fall overrun and controlled by swash-bucklers and budmashes who fall upon innocent wayfarers, insult and assault them. We have more than once called attention to this evil—but like John the Baptist preaching in the wilderness, we have failed to get any sympathetic hearing."

4. The following appears in New India of the 17th August:—"The chauffeur, who has by now earned an All-India repute through suffering, is finally disposed of by the police by interning him in Birbhum. He had been thrice arrested and thrice released, which fact in itself is conclusive proof of his innocence. Lately he was discharged in the Corporation Street dacoity case. It was in connection with his arrest in this case that Mr. Beaman's British ire was excited. His indignant condemnation of police methods in Calcutta proved but a flea-bite to the police authorities concerned. The Alipore Magistrate put forth an apology of explanation, while the police were hoping against hope for a convicting sentence. Alas, for the police! The chauffeur was again at large. The police brain is full of knots. Once a thing sticks there, it is very difficult to extricate it. The police had condemned the chauffeur, and if the Judicial Courts would not convict him, their henchman, the Offence Act, could still help them. Hence, the internment of Mr. Beaman's chauffeur. Mr. Beaman himself promised the public more news about the police and their work, when the last act in the drama was over. The promise is long over-due. Not only the last act, he referred to is over, a fresh drama is presented to the public. In the face of these facts, Mr. Beaman's silence is surprising. Is the public curiosity, excited by his promise, to be satisfied, or have his club instincts prevailed over his British instincts of chivalry?"

5. Referring to the arrest of Babu Manoranjan Gupta by the Calcutta Police under Regulation 3 of 1818, New India, of the 17th August, remarks:—"One extremely painful feature of the repressive policy, as at present practised in Bengal, is the great amount of trouble to which its victims and their relatives are put. . . . . Even in official ways of thinking, it is difficult to guess any excuse for such a procedure. Granting that Babu Manoranjan Gupta's movements ought to be restricted, what was the necessity to create so much pain to his mother or relatives, or to refuse him the necessary clothing and bedding? The deportee has been for the past few months suffering from acute malaria, and the state of his health required his elementary needs to be promptly attended to. Why was that not done? It should be borne in mind that his guilt has not been proved, and at any moment the police may discover, as they have already done in several cases, that their suspicions were misplaced. When such is the position of the victim, can there be the remotest excuse for the hardships described above? It, indeed, passes our comprehension how a statesman of the type of Lord Carmichael can tolerate such misdoings on the part of his subordinates. Can it be that he is again in a minority in his own Government?"

Another C.I.D. joke.

6. The following appears in New India of the 18th August:—"A gentleman who knows Mrs. Annie Besant well, was winding his way through the mazy formalities required before a neutral can change his residence in India. Knowing that this gentleman has resided for some years at Adyar, a Criminal Investigation Department man approached him and asked whether Mrs. Besant's political activities were not supported by German money. The gentleman answered that he was not in sympathy with Mrs. Besant's politics, but that she certainly had no money from Germany, to which country she was violently opposed It is men like this Criminal Investigation Department spy who poison the ears of Governors, and gain credence for their absurdities."

The Tilak case.

7. The Hindu, of the 12th August, writes:—"The District Magistrate of Poona has given his order in Mr. Tilak's case directing him to give security. He speaks of the Government having taken a lenient view in not having directed a prosecution under the substantial sections of the Penal Code, and his order reads more like that of an executive than of a judicial officer. The decision will not come as a surprise upon the public, and we must reserve detailed comments upon it to a future issue."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 14th August, says:—"Mr. Tilak has been bound over for good behaviour for one year, himself in the sum of Rs. 20,000 and two sureties each of Rs. 10,000. The security is heavy, and may be justified on account of Mr. Tilak's influence in Maharashtra. But the decision of the Magistrate on the merits will not be accepted so easily. He was administering a law and not a war measure; and a law is not to be interpreted in view of the circumstances of the day. . . . . The impression that the speeches have produced upon our mind is that the Government of Bombay have been too much influenced by the circumstances in which the speeches were delivered, and by the time chosen by the speaker."

HINDU, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1916.

The Hindu, of the 14th August, observes:—"In giving his decision against Mr. Tilak in the security proceedings, the District Magistrate of Poona is said to have superciliously remarked that Mr. Tilak should consider himself very fortunate that the Government did not proceed against him under the substantive section 124-A of the Penal Code. . . . . Excepting as an incident in its campaign of coercion of those who are engaged in the Home Rule propaganda in this country, it is difficult to account for the Bombay Government having started this prosecution. It began with an order preventing the entry of Mrs. Besant into the Bombay Presidency for which no colour of an adequate ground has yet been disclosed to the public. . . . . The campaign of repression in regard to Home Rule began in Madras with the taking of security from Mrs. Besant, the keeper of the New India Press, under the Indian Press Act. The repressive measures so far taken by the Madras and Bombay Governments are in themselves sufficient to show how illusory are to Indians the rights of freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and freedom to assemble peacefully for the consideration and emphatic statement of political grievances which, Professor Sidgwick says, are specially prized by Englishmen, and which Indians believe to be part of their heritage as loyal citizens of the British Empire. . . . . The conception of sedition in the mind of Anglo-Indian officialdom seems to vary according to persons, places and its whims. While any amount of carping criticism is tolerated when it proceeds from the Anglo-Indian press, the Government is quick to scent sedition and disloyalty in utterances from Indians calculated to awaken the people of the country to a just sense of their inferior position and to make efforts to better themselves in the scale of national advancement."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1916.

Mrs. Annie Besant writes as follows in New India of the 14th August:—"The gagging of Bal Gangadhar Tilak for preaching Home Rule, executed by a member of the Indian Civil Service, which he had attacked with a force and an effectiveness which has driven it to fury, marks another stage on the hard and thorny road which leads to India's freedom. The impertinence of the magistrate in hoping that Mr. Tilak would take the warning, and in telling him that he was fortunate in not being prosecuted for sedition may pass. . . . . This cruel gagging will only strengthen his determination to free India from the yoke of a bureaucracy, which makes it impossible for such a man to speak to his own people. . . . . We need a definition of sedition from the highest legal tribunal, else will all political discussion be prevented in India by the Indian Civil Service. The methods taken to stop discussion in the Bombay Presidency are all indefensible, and cleverly shirk a decision on the main point. The prosecuting counsel, says the Magistrate, 'stated plainly that he did not call into question the propriety of discussion on Home Rule. His instructions were to express no opinions on that point.' The main point is thus left as a hook for catching some one else. Mr. Tilak is bound over, so as to silence him, for any political speech of his would obviously be held to forfeit the Rs. 40,000. I am excluded from the Presidency, and all reason therefor refused, so I can only conclude that Lord Willingdon chooses to consider my speeches at Poona as seditious. I wish I had a report of them, so that I could print them and circulate them in the Bombay Presidency, and so test the question. I have done nothing in the Bombay Presidency save the delivery of those two speeches, so I am obliged to suppose that these are held to be 'prejudicial to the public safety'. . . . . What is His Excellency the Viceroy doing, that he allows the Government of Bombay thus to stir up the fire of anger in Maharashtra?

"Of one thing I am sure; that every act which strikes at the champions of Home Rule makes it dearer to the hearts of the people, and the last word lies with them. We have to face a period of difficulty and danger, but the agony of the Cross precedes the Resurrection of India—A nation."

WEST COAST REFORMER, Calicut, Aug. 16th, 1916.

The West Coast Reformer, of the 16th August, remarks:—"Mr. Tilak has been bound over to be of good behaviour for a period of one year, in sureties amounting in all to Rs. 40,000 notwithstanding the able manner in which Mr. Jinnah showed cause why he should not be bound over. . . . . The Magistrate had no hesitation in deciding that Mr. Tilak in his speech delivered at Belgaum on 1st May did speak words calculated to bring into hatred or contempt Government established by law in British India, and that his speeches at Ahmednagar undoubtedly contained seditious passages. The wisdom of the decision is much to be doubted, as it seems to discredit and threaten the little measure of freedom of speech now available to Indians."

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, Aug. 16th, 1916.

The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 16th August, writes:—"The judgment in the Tilak security case has occasioned a lot of heated controversy about the exact connotation of the word swaraj. Clever lawyers and political partisans may detect subtle shades of meaning in the word, but to the average mind it can convey only one idea and that is, the government of a country by its own people without any control from outside, whatever be the rigour or laxity of that control. Applied to India, the word swaraj can only signify absolute independence of Britain. Any qualified kind of that independence will not mean swaraj. And so, when public men speak of swaraj or Home Rule, they must be understood as aspiring for independence of the British Government, and it is a proposition which the Britishers cannot be expected to acquiesce in. However legitimate that aspiration may be in the abstract, as a working proposition it will not have the countenance of the Government in power. If they should adopt means to stop the spreading of such ideas, those who raise the cry of swaraj have no reason to feel aggrieved. It is idle to expect the British Government to help in cutting the ground under their feet, and it is but natural that they should take care that attempts at it are effectively checked."

A writ of mandamus against the Madras University.

8. The Hindu, of the 16th August, writes:—"Judgment was delivered to-day in the High Court by Coutts Trotter and Kumarasami Sastri, JJ., in the applications for a writ of mandamus against the Syndicate of the Madras University which had been argued about three weeks ago. Their Lordships in two concurring judgments directed mandamus to issue to the Syndicate. It would indeed have been surprising if the learned Judges had come to any other conclusion. . . . . We cannot congratulate the members of the Syndicate on the course which they thought fit to adopt, and on the inglorious result which has followed their defiant disobedience of the regulations. The original resolution of the Senate was the subject of a long and animated discussion. It was opposed by the bulk of the Indian Fellows and was passed by a narrow majority of two or three, and the draft resolution was the handiwork of the Syndicate itself. Under these circumstances, it was common justice that an appeal provided by the regulations against the opinion of the Syndicate and of the resolution supported by a scratch majority of the Senate, should have been allowed to be preferred to the Government. . . . . From persons of the station in life of the members of the Syndicate, a more becoming example was to have been expected of regard for the law, and for considerations of fair play and enlightened tolerance for difference of opinion."

HINDU, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 16th August, says:—"The High Court has granted with costs the application of Mr. G. A. Natesan and Mr. K. B. Ramanadha Ayyar for the issuing of a mandamus to the Syndicate to forward to Government their protest against the Senate decision as to the duties of the University Professors. . . . . The judgments, coupled with the statements made when the case was argued, throw much lurid light on the ways in which business is transacted in our University. To give only one strange incident: it will be remembered that one of the proposed 'Standing orders' was announced by the Vice-Chancellor as having been 'withdrawn' by the Syndicate when its illegality was pointed out. In one of the judgments, there is rightly a query as to how it could have been 'withdrawn by the Syndicate'. Was there any meeting or exchange of views to that effect? Whence did the Vice-Chancellor derive the power to act in that fashion on behalf of the Syndicate? Incidents of that type abound in the transactions of our University, and to put it most mildly, they lower its prestige, though already it is somewhere at the zero point. The Government of India will do well to consider what all that means. Does it not show that the machinery created in 1904 has signally broken down? To-day's judgments make that clearer than ever. . . . . The result is a great strengthening of the Indian Senators' position, and they may be sure that in future, they will be less cavalierly treated than in the past."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1916.

The Indian Patriot, of the 17th August, remarks:—"It is a singular experience for the Syndicate of the Madras University to have been dragged into the court and found to be in the wrong; and the educationists in the University have been bewildered by the audacious step. . . . . This is the first time that the Syndicate has been put into court; and its experience has been discouraging, we must say, humiliating. The Syndicate was far too confident of its absolute authority, and some of its members even expressed horror and surprise at anybody going to court against the University.

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1916.

But the actual thing has been done, the University has been defeated, and been asked to pay the costs on the other side. Having long exercised autocratic power the Syndicate so far thought itself above law and rules that without any hesitation it committed itself to a plain defiance of both. . . . . So long has it been accustomed to do things in its own way that it has instinctly come to regard itself as incapable of doing wrong; and it has got angry with those who said that it was not in the right. The decision of the High Court will have a wholesome influence on this attitude of the Syndicate and of the University generally. It will at least learn that there is an authority higher than itself which will be bound to interpret the law, without caring to consider the effect of its interpretation on the prestige of the University."

9. The following appears in New India of the 16th August:—"It was rather cruel of the Rev. Dr. Mackichan, Vice-Chancellor of the Bombay University, to speak in the presence of His Excellency the Chancellor, as he is reported to have done, about 'the warring ideals' in the conflict now raging, and to say that, under God's government of the world, righteousness and freedom must triumph over the 'doctrine of force that tramples under foot every right of the weak'. We quite agree with him, but was it quite courteous to force on Lord Willingdon's attention the flagrant contrast between 'God's government' and his own?"

Fear in schools.

10. In an article on this subject New India, of the 16th August, writes:—"This Appeal to Fear exists in many parts of the world, but in India it is intensified because of the rigid system into which are forced nearly all who desire to live by brain-work in after-life, however diverse their tastes and abilities. Add to this again the fact that a considerable proportion of the schools are run for purposes ulterior to education, for the inculcation of a foreign form of religion—and that in these schools the boys have come to believe that unless they know that form of religion and answer questions upon it in an apparently appreciative manner they cannot expect to be liked and given the benefit of any doubt in marks and promotions—and we have before us the spectacle of the grandest hypocritising agency in the world, bringing all its subtle force to bear upon the unfolding motives of the defenceless and unguarded young."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1916.

Education and newspapers.

11. New India, of the 17th August, observes:—"We have been reading a report in the South Indian Mail of a speech by the Hon'ble Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, in which he strongly objects to the intervention of newspapers in educational disputes. He said broadly that—any newspaper agitation was wrong, if it was against the examiners, professors, teachers, or against the University.

"That is a most extraordinary position to take up. Any abuse is to be allowed to continue, rather than that a newspaper should draw attention to it! A newspaper is expected to publish a report of a Senate meeting, but must not comment on that which it reports. Even if the education of Indian boys were in Indian hands, Mr. Srinivasa Sastri's position would be impossible; but when we remember that they are in the grip of foreigners, who impose upon them a crushing curriculum in a strange language, who force them to specialise at an age when their natural bent is not discernible, who have no regard to their miserable poverty, nor try to improve their indecent and insanitary surroundings, and who, when professors or teachers, often treat them with the greatest rudeness and address them in the most insulting terms—when this is the present condition of affairs, it is only the feeling that some sympathy is to be found in the press that saves the students from despair."

"Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 17th August, says:—"Our attention has been drawn to certain remarks made by the Hon'ble Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri in a lecture delivered by him to a gathering of students at Madura regarding the failures in the last Intermediate examination. . . . . It seems to us difficult to believe that Mr. Srinivasa Sastri could have made the remarks he is alleged to have made, without laying himself open to the charge of gross inconsistency between his precept and his practice. For he was one of the strongest supporters of Mr. Justice Seshagiri Ayyar's resolution urging an increase in the number of passes by adopting the methods referred to in it. . . . . The South Indian Mail refers to another observation of Mr. Srinivasa Sastri in his lecture which was to the effect that newspaper agitation in such matters was wrong; if it was against the examiners, professors, teachers or the University, as students who were deeply interested in it were put into a way of thinking which to his mind was not altogether compatible with paying due respect to the constituted authorities. Our contemporary disagrees with this remark and we think quite rightly. As a matter of fact, the large amount of public attention which was drawn to the grave scandal of the Intermediate failures was due to the newspaper press. . . . . Mr. Srinivasa Sastri talks glibly of respect to the constituted authorities being thereby impaired. . . . . We attach more importance to the welfare of our young men than to due respect to constituted authorities. In the low level in which public life is in this country, in which there is scarcely any disinterested worker for the public cause, many a grievance would stand unredressed and many an act of injustice would go unremedied, but for the newspaper press. In the present infantile stage of our political existence, publicity and exposure are the chief instruments in our hands for remedying evils of public magnitude, and it is want of thought and ignorance of existing political conditions that seeks to belittle the utility of the public press."

It is clear that the Hindus have every reason to rejoice over the passing of this non-contentious measure; they are being eliminated from the municipal representation, and taxation without representation is robbery. Why should they go to the poll at all? It is a mere farce, and their position as regards taxation would be stronger if they were wholly unrepresented."

Compartments reserved for Europeans.

13. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 9th August, remarks:—"Leaving alone the question of the legality or otherwise of reserving compartments for a particular class or race of passengers, we have not much faith in social intercourse being fostered on board a railway train. The railway is, no doubt, credited with helping to throw down the barriers of caste and class in India, but it is half a fiction which will not bear a close analysis. . . . . If that is the case among Indian passengers, it is idle to expect that inter-racial amenities will be promoted between them and Anglo-Indian or Eurasian passengers. Habits of life are so different that an Indian and an Anglo-Indian passenger are obviously disinclined to chum together in a railway compartment. . . . . To avoid such happenings we would invite the railway companies to reserve compartments on their trains for the different races of passengers and see to it that an Indian passenger is not allowed to enter into a compartment reserved for Anglo-Indians and the latter are not allowed to occupy compartments reserved for Indians. Even though there may not be legal sanction for it, it can be winked at if only to prevent lawlessness on railway trains. We may look elsewhere to the promotion of inter-racial amenities, as a railway train is the least likely place for it."

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, Aug. 9th, 1916.

Western Star, Trivandrum, Aug. 12th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Western Star, of the 12th August, says:—"The reservation of third-class railway compartments for the exclusive use of European and Eurasian passengers on Indian railways is by no means a new question. . . . . Regrettable attempts are at present being made in some quarters to impart a political and racial complexion to the question. No doubt, the matter is not altogether without a political and racial side, but in reality, it is essentially a social question, and nothing more. We consider it peculiarly unfortunate that the really trivial political and racial significance which attaches to it should be sought to be exaggerated, more especially at a time like the present when all classes of the community, European and Indian, should co-operatively do their utmost to avoid controversies calculated to produce unhealthy and undesirable relations. . . . . Without doubt, the unfortunate occurrences which took place a few days ago at one of the railway stations in the city of Madras are to be very largely ascribed to this tendency to magnify the reservation of compartments into a political and racial grievance. The occurrences themselves, being now the subject-matter of proceedings in the Criminal Couts, may not be commented upon, but it is certainly permissible for us to enter a protest against attempts which are being made to create new political and racial controversies in a country which already has a good deal too many such controversies to need any fresh additions to their number. . . . . For our part, we feel that we cannot too strongly discourage the controversy which has been aroused over the question of reservation, and it is our belief that the abolition of the existing differentiation would result in more harm than good. We consider that the Indian third-class railway passenger is much better off, generally speaking, than he is at all likely to be, were the existing barrier pulled down out of deference to the thoughtless clamour of persons, who are apt to take leave of their senses when they raise the cry of political and racial equality, and were we to offer a suggestion of our own, this would be that compartments should not only be reserved for European and Eurasian third-class passengers, but these ought, save in very exceptional circumstances, to be debarred from travelling in third-class compartments other than those specially set apart for them."

District Board Railways

14. The Hindu, of the 12th August, writes:—"We have to protest once more against the attitude of the Government of Madras in regard to District Board Railways, an attitude which is in striking contrast with the original lead given by them to board enterprise and their general professions in regard to it. In April last, the Government stated in answer to an interpellation that the acceptance of Messrs. Binny & Co.'s application in respect of the Dindigul-Palghat line of Railway was subject to the satisfactory settlement of one point which was still under consideration. . . . . We are now in the middle of August and the public are entitled to know what stage the proposal of Messrs. Binny & Co. has reached. In our view, a great deal more importance is paid to the rapid execution of branch line railway projects than need be the case, and the hasty conclusion of the arrangement with the company is to be deplored. As if this was not enough, the local Government have decided to recommend the application of the Bombay Company to construct the Ramnad-Tenkasi Railway, in preference to the request of the District Boards of Ramnad and Tinnevelly to allow them to construct the line. . . . . Why is this hurry to construct the line and close with the offer of the Bombay Company? It would appear that this offer is open till April next and that the district boards of Ramnad and Tinnevelly are to be allowed to participate in the branch line company to the extent of their financial capacity. But we are unable to understand why the Government should be so anxious to have these lines constructed at a time when the financial stress is so great and railway materials are so dear. We fear that the concern for district board railway enterprise, which was such a conspicuous feature of the Government a few years ago, is slowly disappearing."

15. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 9th August, writes :— WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, Aug. 9th, 1916.

The Congress Presidentship.

"Mrs. Besant pities the various Congress Committees that they have let slip a golden opportunity to give the Government a bit of their mind as to their treatment of her, by electing her to preside over the next Congress. That would have been the most emphatic and unanimous protest, but short-sighted men that they are, they have gone and done otherwise. It is the fate of India to be guided by such leaders, and no wonder that she is relegated to a back seat in the comity of nations. But Mrs. Besant is consoled by the thought that the Madras Congress Committee has recommmended Diwan Bahadur L. A. Govindaraghava Ayyar, the most competent leader next to her. And his qualifications for the honour are legion. First and foremost is that he is a member of the Madras Parliament, and that he piloted through that honourable body a Religious Endowments Bill. What do they know of the Madras Parliament who only the British Parliament know, and what does it matter that the Government of India still shake in their shoes if a proposal is made to amend the Religious Endowments Act, now that an Act has been carried through the Madras Parliament."

New India, of the 14th August, has the following:—"The public meeting of the citizens of Lucknow, held on August 11th, presided over by Mr. Syed Nabi Ullah, at which the Hon'ble Pandit Gokarnath Misra, a Secretary of the Congress Reception Committee, proposed, and the Hon'ble Mr. Syed Wazir Hasan, Secretary of the All-India Muslim League, seconded a proposition, unanimously carried, that 'the person best fitted to preside over the Congress would be Mrs. Annie Besant,' leads me to make the following statement. NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1916.

"I was selected by the Madras Congress Committee as one of the 'eligibles' for the presidency of the Congress, and was first in order of voting strength. At the meeting called for the final election, I rose before any candidate was proposed, stated frankly that I thought that, under present conditions, I ought to be returned as a protest against the attack by the Governments of Madras and Bombay on the liberty of the press and of political discussion; but that such a vote, to be valuable, should be unanimous, and that I knew that it would not be unanimous in that committee. (An active canvas had been carried on for the return of Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya.) That being so, rather than be a bone of contention, I withdrew my candidature. Under these circumstances, Diwan Bahadur L. A. Govindaraghava Ayyar, who had before stood second on the list, was elected by 21 votes to 11—a choice which we, the majority, regard as an honour to the committee.

"My own withdrawal, it will be seen, was not motived by any unwillingness to accept the great honour of election, but by the feeling that an almost evenly divided vote on a person who, for the moment, is embodying the principle of the freedom of the press and of political discussion, would be useless and even mischievous. . . . . The principle by which English liberty has been won, to defend liberty where she is attacked instead of where she is not attacked is not yet acceptable to the elders of the Congress movement. . . . . That spirit of defending liberty wherever she is attacked, under the most trying circumstances, is born in India, and ensures her redemption. But it is born into the younger generation, in men up to, perhaps, forty years of age. In the elders it is found in a minority only. . . . . My election would prove to Great Britain that India is in earnest, and is following Great Britain's own example of boldly standing by a person who is fighting for liberty, and of opposing Governments who are trying to shackle free speech. . . . . For me, I have one object only, to serve in winning India's Freedom, and I count it as the crown of my life that, in my old age, I am privileged to fight and to suffer for her. As the President of her Congress, or as a guest in a Government Prison, I am equally content, for in either case I am her servant.

"MADRAS,
"14*th August* 1916.

"ANNIE BESANT."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 12th, 1916.

The West Coast Spectator, of the 12th August, observes:—"The Madras Congress Committee justify the selection of Diwan Bahadur Govindaraghava Ayyar on the ground that Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya has not taken part in the Congress organisation in Madras. This is very funny news, but these amiable and patriotic gentlemen seem to have forgotten history. They would do well to get a copy of Natesan's Indian Politics and to read it carefully, when they would be convinced that Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya is a staunch Congressman, but not of the red-hot or weak-kneed variety. Why, the Madras Committee did vote for Sir S. P. Sinha last year and the Madras politicians got down Dr. Kash Behari Ghose to preside over the Madras Congress. Perhaps this objection did not hold good in their case.

"We can have no respect for people who make mistakes and attempt to justify them calling in specious argument. Whatever the committee might think their performance, the people outside of charmed circle believe that they acted in a most unwarranted fashion. What is past is past, and let us draw a veil over the incident, hoping, at the same time, that on future occasions at least, the committee would not make themselves the laughing stock of the public by their performances."

Wednesday Review, Trichinopoly, Aug. 16th, 1916.

The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 16th August, remarks:—"A Madras contemporary denounces the Provincial Congress Committee that the claims of Mr. C. Vijayarāghava Achārya have been overlooked for the Presidentship of the Lucknow Congress. According to Mrs. Besant rigorous canvassing went on at the committee for Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya and that was why she withdrew from the field with commendable patriotism. . . . . We believe that this is the first time in the history of the congress that a prospective candidate went about advancing his (or her) claims for the presidency in that open fashion, and it was sheer ingratitude that the Provincial Congress Committee did not unanimously vote for Mrs. Annie Besant, though she did not personally make any difference between being a prisoner or a president. And so, despite herself she had to give up the idea. But that is Mrs. Besant's way of forcing herself on public attention."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 10th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the West Coast Spectator, of the 10th August, says:—"Though the Madras Congress Committee have 'forgotten' Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya and the meritorious public services he has rendered, it is some consolation that the other committees have not. Nagpur has elected him unanimously, while among the nominees, Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya has secured the largest number of votes. We may yet see Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya riding at the top of the polls and presiding over the Lucknow Congress. A prophet is not honoured in his own country, and verily, this has been exemplified in the case of Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya. From the letters appearing in some of our contemporaries we are to infer that the action of the committee has created the greatest indignation—and that too very rightly."

The Censor.

16. New India, of the 12th August, states:—"The Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs has issued a sheet of 'Censorship Dont's' which will be found useful. It tells you what not to do, and thereby saves the Censor worry and unnecessary work when you are telegraphing. We wish the Director-General would also issue a sheet of Dont's for the use of the Censor himself, e.g.: Don't interfere unnecessarily with private and press telegrams; don't censor matter which has nothing to do with the war; don't insult non-official Indian members of the Viceroy's Council by suppressing their harmless opinions on the iniquities of the Press Act; don't suppress reports of lectures on Home Rule, nor reports of gatherings where due homage is paid by people to their leaders, even though they be Home Rulers; don't suppress opinions of newspapers when telegraphed, for post-service still prevails in the country, and what you suppress will appear fully a few hours later; don't lose your temper and meddle with a telegram because its contents are unpalatable to you. We can add a few more, but, as we are only making a suggestion, these will suffice as specimens."

17. In the fifth of a series of articles on this subject, New India, of the 12th August, writes :—" In pursuing his careful study of the Empire, Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal comes to the all-important question of the future Constitution of the Empire, the question which is being so actively discussed in Great Britain and the Colonies, but on which some authorities, such as the Governor of Bombay, seek to stop all discussion in India. If they succeed, it will mean the indefinite prolongation of India's condition as a Dependency, the indefinite putting off of self-government. . . . . Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal points out that the empire will be reconstituted on a Federal basis, and that the Colonies will certainly claim their place in the Federal Parliament. . . . . It would be well that Great Britain should realise that India will never submit to be governed by the Colonies. As the continuance of her present subjection is impossible, an equal place must be found for India in the Councils of the Empire. This must be the demand of the coming Congress, and we must at once organise to this end."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 12th, 1916.

18. The Malabar Herald, for the week ending 12th August, states :— " After all, the Tuticorin Harbour question has been finally settled. . . . . It may be said, on the whole, that Tuticorin is to get a deep sea harbour at an early date. So far, so good; but let us know what has become of the Cochin Harbour question. If Tuticorin is to be provided with one, Cochin need not expect another. Here we see the finger of the Madras merchants very actively playing in the game. They knew too well that the Imperial Government is determined to have a harbour, and so long as it is to be constructed at Tuticorin, the Madras merchants will endeavour their level best to have it located close to their scene of activity, and they would never, for the life of them, allow Cochin to have one. Here the point presents for consideration whether it is an Imperial or a Provincial Scheme. If it is of the latter kind, Cochin can still hope to have one to satisfy Imperial exigencies in which case it will be a naval station. Let us, however, wait for the settlement of this difference. Till then we need not give up our hopes."

The Tuticorin and Cochin Harbour Schemes.

MALABAR HERALD, British Cochin, Aug. 12th, 1916.

19. Writing under this heading, the Malabar Herald, for the week ending 12th August, remarks :—" Writing a few weeks back, on political agitation in India, we promised to revert to the subject with a view to examine certain conditions to see whether India is ripe for self-government or Home Rule, as the new political creed would have it. In certain quarters our article in question was regarded as wanting in sympathy for the aspirations of the Indians. This assumption was uncalled for; as being conscious of the fact that India has progressed politically since the inauguration of the National Congress, we could not, for a moment, be suspected to advance any view that is diametrically opposed to the fulfilment of these aspirations, nor could we be accused of playing to the gallery. . . . . It has often been pointed out by the Anglo-Indian press with some justification that in the event of India being brought under Home Rule the Brahminical element will dominate the situation and endeavour to extend the patronage to those who are connected with them by these affinities. When the primary object of a Government is for the benefit of all, irrespective of caste, creed or colour, the idea of its benefits being enjoyed by a few would be incongruous. For these reasons it is absolutely essential that there should be an Indian nationality before self-government is granted to the people in its complete form. . . . . Nowhere in the world we think there are so many classes and creeds as there are in India. Among the Christians there are as many as 200 sects with sharp doctrinal differences. The Muhammadans are divided into several sects. Though they may be professing one religion, still the difference of religious views is so irreconcilable that they cannot be brought together to view a common object with that unanimity which is essential for a mutual co-operation. . . . . Next comes the Hindu element which must be looked upon as a powerful entity if it is to be taken in its entirety: but that aspect loses much of its vitality by the fact that there are different classes of Hindus. For the sake of brevity we shall divide them into two classes: viz., Brahmins and non-Brahmins. From the very time of their origin there has been a perpetual conflict between the two, the Brahmins endeavouring to outdistance the non-Brahmins in the race of life, the caste system being used as a mighty weapon. The social reconciliation of these two classes cannot be looked upon as an innovation in the near future. Even in this connection there is a prospect of improvement; but it will be extremely slow, and unless that pernicious system of caste is entirely destroyed the union of these classes cannot be brought about. . . . . On examining all the conditions we have enumerated above, we do not think that India is ripe for self-government or Home Rule just at present. In doing so, we should not be understood to mean that the Indians enjoy a sufficient share of the responsibility in the government of their own country. A few isolated appointments either in the Secretary of State's Council or in that of the Governor-General can scarcely be considered as satisfying the demands of the people, nor is it reasonable to suppose that a full measure of their responsibility for the government of the country is allowed to them by the expansion of the Imperial and Provincial Legislative Councils."

"Is India ripe for self-government ?"

MALABAR HERALD, British Cochin, Aug 12th, 1916.

Cochin Argus, British Cochin, Aug. 12th, 1916.

Nayar recruits for the army.

20. In a leader headed "Doing our bit", the Cochin Argus, for the week ending 12th August, says:—"The alleged grievance that India's man-power is being denied its fair chance of hurling itself against the enemy has not failed to find much expression in our own district, but for all that, Mr. Evans considered it necessary to utilise the occasion of the recent 4th of August meeting at Calicut in order to remind his audience that recruiting officers have hitherto failed to obtain among the Moplahs, Nayars and Tiyyas the amount of man-power which they had been led to reckon upon. By way, presumably, of an answer to the Collector's frank statement, another speaker at the meeting advanced the view that recruiting proceeded sluggishly, only because the objects and ideals of the war had not yet been properly or sufficiently interpreted to the people at large. This is a view to which we do not find it possible to subscribe. Speaking generally, we believe that the people at large are quite sufficiently acquainted, both with the causes which brought about the war and with the vastness and general trend of the struggle. What is wanted, in our own view, is hearty and unselfish co-operation on the part of the educated and influential classes with recruiting officers and with the Government generally for the purpose of securing the numbers of recruits that are needed. . . . . India, we have no doubt, is perfectly sincere in desiring that its man-power should be very much more largely requisitioned for fighting the battles of the empire, but the leaders of the Indian people ought to try and recognise, more sensibly than they seem to be doing, that the value of a gift reduces in proportion to the number of exacting conditions attached to it."

New India, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1916.

Writing under the heading "England's loss", New India, of the 15th August, remarks:—"Sir Pherozeshah Mehta and Sir Sankaran Nayar both warned England in the early days of the Congress that by disarming Indians under the Arms Act of 1878 they were emasculating the nation. For more than a year the English authorities have been endeavouring to enlist a Nayar regiment, and only 300 men have enlisted during that time, out of what was once a splendid fighting race. Such is one of the lamentable results of the Arms Act. As Sir Sankaran Nayar prophesied, England has to rely chiefly in her hour of need on Indian prayers, instead of on Indian arms."

Western Star, Trivandrum, Aug. 15th, 1916.

The Western Star, of the 15th August, writes:—"India's man-power is not coming forward, at any rate on the West Coast, only because the masses of the people remain ignorant as regards their higher duties and obligations, this obstacle is not irremediable and it should devolve on the leaders of the people to prove their own loyalty and earnestness by going amongst the masses and facilitating the work of the recruiter. . . . . There are public obligations and responsibilities which the loyal and discerning citizen should undertake without waiting to be asked to do so, and helping to recruit men for active service is undoubtedly one of such duties and obligations. If failure to perform it results in the authorities turning away from this country to more promising fields of recruitment, the shame and the reproach will rest upon India alone, and we fervently trust, therefore, that instead of simply raving about India's man-power being denied its legitimate opportunity, the leaders of the people will lay themselves out to help forward the work of the recruiter, and above everything, to convince the masses that those who are given the opportunity to enlist are given incidentally the opportunity of helping to defend the highest, purest and most inspiring ideals for which man, since the beginning of creation, has ever been called upon to shed his blood and lay down his life."

Mr. Tilak and Home Rule.

"The Blood of the Martyrs.

"Mr. Tilak being momentarily silenced, a series of lectures on Home Rule is being arranged, so that a continuous agitation may be kept up. The lectures are being carefully prepared and written, so as to prevent Criminal Investigation Department distortion. Mr. Tilak's silence creates many speakers. That is as it should be. Persecution will no more succeed in Maharashtra than it has succeeded in Bengal."

22. In a leader on this subject the Hindu, of the 15th August, says.— HINDU, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1916.

The Pilgrim Committee and charitable institutions.

"One of the important points which occupied the attention of the Pilgrim Committee is the present condition of charitable institutions in this Presidency. . . . . It has always been regarded as one of the duties of the State to see that charitable endowments, especially for the accommodation of travellers, are not diverted from their original objects and a definite part of the duties of the Board of Revenue and its local agents, the Collectors, under the Regulation of 1817 is the control of choultries and chatrams. . . . . Nevertheless, when the Pilgrim Committee went round, numerous complaints were made that on account of neglect of this important duty of the State, several choultries have been misappropriated with their endowments and have become private property and are not, therefore, available for the use of the public for which they were originally intended. . . . . We feel no hesitation in saying that public opinion in this presidency will fully support any well-considered legislation that may be undertaken in this respect. We presume that the Government have been hitherto reluctant to take steps for a more effective control, and the Board of Revenue and the Collectors have, we venture to think, neglected their statutory duties in this respect much to the detriment of the public."

23. The Indian Patriot, of the 15th August, writes:—"Whoever may be the President of the congress at its forthcoming session, it is not to be expected that he will command the same prestige and influence as Sir S. P. Sinha did. It is true that Sir S. P. Sinha did not escape irreverent criticism, but he survived it without the least injury either to the best interests of the congress or to his own prestige. The attempt made by the Home Rule party to capture the congress failed. That attempt will be renewed; and it will depend largely on the wisdom of the man at the helm whether the congress will become the instrument of the Home Rule agitation or whether it will dominate the politics of the country. . . . . The sober sense, for which the congress has been given credit, and with which it has tempered the enthusiasm of young men, has been its most valued asset. If that is gone, what will remain to engage the sympathy of well-meaning English politicians who have been drawn to the congress in a spirit of regard and sympathy? Wild dreams may be substituted for well-thought-out and practical schemes which are on the eve of acceptance, and those dreams are incapable of realisation in the present

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1916.

The Congress situation.

state of public opinion either in India or England. . . . . We must expect this split to be inevitable if Home Rule propaganda is to be forced upon the Congress. The older Congressmen will not submit to the acceptance of Home Rule. . . . . A trial of strength will become inevitable between the forward and the conservative section. and in this trial the sympathy of authority will necessarily be with those who have accepted the creed of the Congress and not with those who wish to go in advance of it. Against Home Rule, as it is presented now, the feeling of the country generally is one of distrust and suspicion. . . . . Those who believe that merit consists in making people hope for the impossible may worship at the shrine of Home Rule. But beyond making men cherish wild dreams, they will achieve nothing practical. They will have, on the other hand, thrown back the progress of the country by many years. . . . . The measures enacted under the Viceroyalty of Lord Minto and of Lord Hardinge have had their origin in defiance of authority. Our success in political agitation has never lain in this direction; but that is precisely the direction on which Mrs. Besant would have us go."

New India, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1916.

24. New India, of the 16th August, has the following :—

"The Amrita Bazaar Patrika says:

The Governments of Madras and Bombay and Mrs. Besant.

We learn from one of the highest authorities in the land that the Government of India had nothing to do with the measures taken against Mrs. Besant. The Madras Government and the Bombay Government are wholly responsible for their acts.

"We believe this to be true but could not the Government of India have prevented what has been done? Would either the Governor of Madras or of Bombay fly right in the face of the Viceroy? And what about Mr. Tilak? Has the Government of Bombay been allowed, without rebuke, to set Maharashtra on fire? The action against Mr. Tilak is far worse than that against Mrs. Besant; after all, hers is a sentimental grievance, as she does not want to go to Bombay just now, and insults do not affect one whose conscience is clean; but the refusal to Mr. Tilak of a passport, preventing him from seeking justice in England, and the gagging for a year of a popular leader, these are real wrongs. Even the security imposed on New India has come to nothing. We go on gaily, exactly as though it did not exist. The Local Government has more reason to object to Mr. Pelly's proceedings than we."

New India, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1916.

25. New India, of the 18th August, writes:—"The English papers have seen the object aimed at by the Bombay Government in excluding Mrs. Annie Besant from their Presidency. . . . . Many of the papers speak of an 'underground agitation' carried on for some time in London, but it is difficult to know what is meant by this. It takes some time to shape a leagne, and undue hurry would not have been wise. . . . . We have not yet heard of the 'dangerous point' of the demand of Home Rule as 'the reward of loyalty to the Empire'. On the contrary, Indians repudiate this strongly, and claim Home Rule on the old ground that 'taxation without representation is robbery,' and that 'legislation without representation is tyranny'. England taught us these lessons. The East India Association says that 'no form of political oppression now prevails in any part of India'; and that, with the fifteen coercive Regulations and Acts and with Mr. Tilak bound over on account of purely political speeches! 60,000,000 of peasants are 'fairly prosperous,' whatever that means, and 109,000,000 are always hungry. 'Many hundreds of years' are to pass before 'many parts of India' can have Home Rule; if that were true it is irrelevant as regards the many more parts that are ready for it. Well, we shall see.

The Government of Bombay and Mrs. Annie Besant.

"The Globe, suppressed under the Defence of the Realm Act a little time since, but now going on again, a virulent Tory organ, says:—

They have a plain way in India of dealing with Home Rulers. Mrs. Annie Besant has aired her views on the matter, and is in consequence prohibited from entering Bombay Presidency, under the Defence of India Act. We were under the impression that in this country we were living under a similar measure known as the Defence of the Realm Act, but the parallel ceases apparently with the title. The home-made article, if we may judge by the results of the recent rebellion, encourages Home Rulers rather than prohibits them. They manage these things better in India.

"Here breathes the good old Tory spirit. Suppress, suppress. It is the spirit which lost the American Colonies, and has made many a revolution. . . . . On the whole, we are very grateful to His Excellency the Governor of Bombay for helping the Home Rule propaganda by his exclusion order. He has shown the English people how constitutional and law-abiding agitation is treated in India, and has thus rendered our work easier. The English people know Mrs. Besant too well to believe that she is seditious, and they know her of old as a Home Ruler. So they will understand."

26. New India, of the 18th August, has the following:—"In an interview which Dr. Tagore gave to the Japanese correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, Sir Rabindranath Tagore made a few observations on British ways in India. . . . . There is much in this to enrage the Anglo-Indian, who will, we have no doubt, even question the accuracy of the facts stated by Dr. Tagore. . . . . England is already feeling the poisonous nature of Anglo-Indian influence. The latest mail papers, for example, tell us how Lord Sydenham, who owes his present position largely to the late Liberal Government, is one of the 'Die Hards,' determined to keep out Home Rule from Ireland. And that nobleman also threatened some time ago to question the soundness of a policy directed against legalised slavery, styled the indenture system. That is the nature of the influence which is, as a rule, imported from this country, as the result of the system of Government that we have here."

27. In commenting on the notification in the Fort St. George Gazette doing away with the 50 per cent rule and restoring the minimum of net profits to be carried to the reserve fund to 25 per cent, New India, of the 18th August, observes:—"We congratulate the Government on their wise decision and we are sure they will have the thanks of all co-operators in the Presidency. But it is amusing to see that the Government have chosen such an obscure manner of publishing this notification that the press and the general public have hitherto failed to notice it, though it was published so long ago as the 11th of last month. . . . . A matter about which there was so much discussion in the press, at the conferences and in the Legislative Council surely deserved a less stealthy insertion. We wonder whether the Government have taken the trouble to inform the Hon'ble Messrs. Srinivasa Sastri and Narasimha Ayyar about their resolution being virtually accepted."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1916.

28. Referring to the comments of Indiaman on the proposed appointment of a Medical Adviser to the India Office, the Hindu, of the 18th August, says:—"'When bureaucracies fall out',—the intelligent reader can complete the quotation for himself. We are led to this amendation of an ancient proverb by the increased strife which is likely to take place between the bureaucracies in India and in England to whose joint control are confided the destinies of India. . . . . It is quite clear that the Indian public in the absence of a better state of things would rather be governed by a bureaucracy in India than by one in England. The reason is a simple one. The Indian bureaucracy is on the spot, answerable, however imperfectly, to the Indian Councils and amenable to a certain extent to the pressure of pubic opinion. The bureaucracy in England is a law unto itself. At its head is a professional politician who too often takes his post as a huge joke and is content to leave the running of it to the permanent officials. . . . . We need only instance the heckling in Parliament over the Mesopotamia 'muddle' and the large extent to which the Indian Government is being harried in its turn by the India Office and asked to furnish scape-goats to appease the British public. Undoubtedly the existing state of things is extremely unsatis factory and the only remedy is to remove this anomalous and mischievous interference of the English bureaucracy. This, however, cannot be done without a struggle, and if the Indian Government wants to win, its only course is for it to be more amenable to public opinion and to take the public into its confidence to a much greater extent. It cannot do better in this respect than follow in the footsteps of the late Viceroy."

The India Office and the Indian Government.

Mysore Patriot, Mysore, Aug. 15th, 1916.

Enquiries into the conduct of public servants in Mysore.

29. The Mysore Patriot, for the week ending 15th August, writes:—"In the interests of public justice and the purity of administration enquiries into the alleged bad conduct of officers and officials are absolutely necessary. But every precaution should be taken to make such enquiries as speedy and just as possible. . . . . Under these circumstances and on such grounds the poor clerk Chaluviah was kept under suspension for four years during which he had evidently to undergo a lot of difficulties, humiliation, disgrace and loss. It is a relief to see that at last he was declared innocent by the Sessions Judge on 17th July 1916. This goes to show how dangerous it is to suspect a servant to be a criminal and proceed to collect evidence to get him convicted. The declaration of the innocence of the poor man by the Sessions Judge is doubtless a relief, but is it a compensation for the worry, toil, loss, etc., to which the accused was put? . . . . It is not possible to say what reparation the Government are going to make to the poor clerk who is declared to have been innocent. It is hardly necessary to describe the effect of a glaring injustice like this and the morality and self-respect of the subordinate service in general. Not only in Judicial but in other departments as well, speedy justice would go a great way to minimize the evil. Such cases should be heard from day to-day till the case is concluded in which case there will be little room for importing into the records evidences both for and against.

"Suspension for four years and compelling the accused person to remain under the sword of the Damocles during such a long period is a mode of dispensing justice which no civilised Government can approve. . . . . The Government are solicitous that good people ought to be rewarded and bad people punished. Prolonging the dispensing of justice is a premium to bad people and an undeserved punishment to innocent people. If an innocent man is compelled to be under a cloud for years together and even if he obtains justice in the end, it will be poor satisfaction to him; for during the time of a prolonged trial, he will have suffered loss both pecuniary and mental, which may even make him mad. The Government, therefore, should show a greater solicitude to protect the innocent and punish the criminal without unnecessary delay."

Karnataka, Bangalore City, Aug. 16th, 1916.

The Century Club, Bangalore.

30. The Karnataka, of the 16th August, observes:—"The latest project on the anvil of those who are sworn to make Mysore progressive is that of a Century Club. The name, we suppose, is borrowed from the famous institution of that kind in New York; and that will doubtless be the model for our irrepressibles here. The membership, as the name suggests, will probably be restricted to a hundred, which of course means that it will be the rendezvous mostly of our official aristocracy, with perhaps a stray legal or other notable as a welcome variant to relieve the monotony of gubernatorial splendour. . . . . We hear that it is intended to lend a sum of about twenty thousand rupees to the proposed club free of interest for a number of years,—a favour, be it remembered, not granted to many a famishing municipality. It seems the absence of a first-class club in Bangalore had stood in the way of its becoming attractive and pleasant to distinguished visitors from outside; and this is perhaps a sufficient excuse for Government for coming forward with offers of help. . . . . A club, as every one knows, is a Western institution. Its purpose is to bring together for purposes of study and recreation those who have a common political, professional or cultural ideal.

Such an ideal, as we have pointed out times without number, is conspicuous by its absence in Mysore. We have no politics, except appointment squabbles: and we can well imagine what high politics the Century Club, composed mostly of officers, will dilate upon. . . . . Already our English-educated classes are sufficiently fashion-ridden; and their costly and apish vanities are being eagerly adopted by less favoured rural folk. If our Government-aided Century Club were to imitate this darker side of its Western prototypes more religiously than the existing clubs have done, those interested in the denationalization of Mysoreans will not have to wait long for an opportunity to congratulate themselves. . . . . And after all, if the club can afford certain advantages, there are also men who know it; and they are well able to do without State-aid. There are in fact two clubs already in existence; and if they have not the vitality to stand and prosper —as some have indeed stood at Mysore and elsewhere—what is the use of artificial bolstering up? The subscription books of many such institutions unfold a dismal tale and is this a sign of our men's fitness to have clubs? If the Centurians fare similarly as regards their dues to the club, what is to become of the loan from Government?

"Viewed from any point, the wisdom of Government identifying themselves with the club movement does not commend itself for our admiration. But, as we have said, they are firm believers in their own infallibility; and we wish them all the joy of that confidence."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Aug. 17th, 1916.

31. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 17th August, says that it was unwise not to have included the neutrals in the Paris Economic Conference and conjectures that this exclusion might have the effect of alienating their sympathies, particularly of such a powerful state as the United States, towards the allies and urges that the allies will now at least make amends for this exclusion of the neutrals, in view of the fact that the competition in trade and industries will be as keen at the close of the war and a possibility of a second war with Germany might arise, in which the allies must be equally sure of success.

The Paris Economic Conference.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Aug. 18th, 1916.

32. Writing on this subject the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 18th August, remarks:—Notwithstanding that many Indians have joined the Military department and that many of them have proceeded on field service too, the opinion is abroad that unless the Indians are treated on a footing of equality with the British in the matter of pay and allowances, the educated and patriotic section of them will not join the army in large numbers. It is however quite inexpedient that that opinion should be allowed to prevail at critical times such as these. It is now the foremost duty of our people to follow the splendid example set by millions of others and to sacrifice our very lives, not to speak of our property, in order to ensure the permanence of the British Empire. That the British Government did not permit us to do our duty was indeed a source of sincere regret to our people; but that is now a thing of the past. The fact that they have commenced to recruit men for the army in Bengal shows that the British Government have brought the Government of India round to their own favourable view of the matter. This therefore is the time for our people to show that we Indians are thoroughly fitted to enjoy this privilege.

Indians and Military Service.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Aug. 18th, 1916.

33. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 18th August, writes:—Notwithstanding that the princes and peoples of India have most liberally contributed their share to the expenses of the war and have actually sent lakhs and lakhs of men to the front, some Englishmen are found to taunt us by saying that we have not risen to the occasion and done all that we could and ought to have done. The complaint however is as groundless as it is absurd. Why more, His Majesty the King Emperor himself has complimented us upon our patriotism and thanked us for the help that we have given. How strange that when we, the people of India, treat the British Empire as our own and act accordingly, our revilers treat us as if we are not of their fold and bring such charges upon us! It is a source of even greater regret that measures which would create disaffection among the people, such as the prohibition of the right of free speech, etc., are being introduced in this country. Is it not to the interest of both the Indians and the British that nothing should be allowed to disturb the good feeling and the identity of interests now prevailing between the two races? Every attempt at disturbing these good relations should be put down by the British Government. Surely they cannot be the real well-wishers of the Empire who, ignoring the loyal devotion of our people to the British throne, belittle the splendid help rendered by India and support the executive in their misuse of the Press Act and such other repressive measures.

India and the war.

34. The Qaumi Report, of the 5th August, in a leader on the marginally-noted subject in recapitulating the events of the past two years, says:—"During the last two years Britain has stood firm shoulder to shoulder with the Allies and shared their hardships and comforts. She has given great financial assistance; her fleet has fought at the Dardanelles and Gallipoli and has gone back. Her forces advanced in Mesopotamia from Busra to Baghdad, pitched their tents, established their cantonments and gladly made the necessary sacrifices in prisoners to ensure a retreat. She occupied Salonika, opposed the enemy in Belgium, assumed the defensive in France and established her hold upon German (East) Africa.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 5th, 1916.

The third year of the European war.

To-day, however, it is vain to look back at past events. We should now observe what is going to happen in the future. When we consider the number of lives and precious things that have been lost during this period of bloodshed the heart exclaims good God!

Crores of money have been expended, lacs of useful things have been sacrificed and yet like hell itself war-fiend cries for more. God knows when the struggle will end! To-day, the first of the third year of war, finds the British Government putting all its resources to the test.

We think the time is fast approaching—a time which is anxiously awaited by all when peace and tranquility will return. Oh God, have mercy upon Thy creatures!

The Mushir-i-Dakhan, of the 6th August, writes:—Two full years have passed since this great worldwide war began, and the 4th August 1916 marks the commencement of the third year. But, in spite of this long period, there is no apparent sign of any decrease in its intensity, and no one can say with any degree of certainty as to when the appalling sanguinary struggle will end.

MUSHIR-I-DAKHAN, Hyderabad, Aug. 6th, 1916.

The third year of the European war.

During these two years several hundreds of thousands of soldiers have been killed, countless families ruined and thousands of cities rendered desolate. The enemy, too, has suffered enormous losses in men and money, the morale of the enemy's forces is daily decreasing. His armies are continually being defeated and driven back, but still, utterly regardless of self-respect, he is striving his utmost to achieve the impossible.

The effect of the war is not limited to Europe alone, but the whole world is affected by it.

A very careful consideration of the daily progress of the war reveals this fact that the strength of the enemy is rapidly declining from which a speedy termination of the war may be hoped. His cruel and barbarous acts are, however, on the increase and from every corner the world's cries of shame and contempt are being raised against the German Government. Germany alone is responsible for all this bloodshed, slaughter, destruction and distress and the originator of this struggle is the hard-hearted savage and mischievous ruler, Kaiser Wilhelm.

As truth always prevails, we strongly hope, nay we are certain that, in the end, the Allies will be victorious and the wicked enemy will be punished for his misdeeds. We ardently desire that the struggle may terminate very soon and therefore our heartfelt prayer is that the gracious God, who is just and generous, may vouchsafe a great victory to our Government which is the supporter of right, and the protector of its people and whose benign rule is a source of blessing and comfort to all without distinction of caste or creed.

35. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 10th August, in a leader on the marginally-noted subject, writes:—The British Government publishes war news regularly every day; and the despatches to His Excellency the Viceroy give full details and therefore the British people have much to be thankful for. On the contrary the German Government keeps the German people entirely ignorant of events at the Front.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1916.

War news is not published in Berlin.

JAMIDAR-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 12th, 1916.

36. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 12th August, writes:—A mere glance at the present war is sufficient to teach us a great lesson. The war has made the Germans so savage and base that there are no traces of humanity left in them. God knows how they will be punished and what will be their end for all the different kinds of weapons and means they have used for the destruction of human life.

"How we can drive our enemies."

We should treat the enemy just as he has treated us and chastise him in a manner that people will remember for all time and all may realise the truth of the saying:—

"One is rewarded according to one's work."

Our Government is prepared to chastise him and has already punished him well. But in matters connected with this war where there is occasion for the expenditure of much life and property, the necessity has arisen for the people's help. Ever since the beginning of creation there has never been a single kingdom in the world whose people refused to aid it in the time of need. The peace and comfort enjoyed by the people under the rule of our Imperial Government have probably never been experienced by any other nation at any time under any other rule. Hence in order to maintain the vigour of the British attacks in this sanguinary war it is incumbent on the people of India to efficiently help our Government in all its needs.

We have to carefully consider how to avenge the wrong done by Germany by putting men to death unjustly and how to soothe the feelings of our own hearts.

The editor advises the rich to advance and subscribe as much money as is required by the Government and says that such an act consists of two-fold benefits: (1) the establishment of their loyalty, (2) the repayment of the debt in full after the war.

II.—HOME ADMINISTRATION.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1916.

37. Adverting to the frequent arrests made by the Police in Bengal and the acquittal of the majority of the persons arrested after an enquiry, the Swadesamitran, of the 1st August, observes:—This proves beyond doubt that many persons are arrested without sufficient cause and proper evidence. Apart from the injustice of arresting any man on mere suspicion, what about the indignity he suffers by being kept in confinement for some days? If the Police go on arresting people without any forethought and then releasing them, will it indicate their capability or intelligence? There is nothing strange in such promiscuous arrests creating unnecessary anxiety in the minds of the people.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 12th, 1916.

38. Referring to the case against Mr. Tilak, the Andhrapatrika, of the 12th August, says:—The public who read the reports of the proceedings were under the impression that the case would not stand. The decision of the Magistrate therefore came to them as a surprise.

Mr. Tilak.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1916.

In commenting on the judgement in Mr. Tilak's case, the Andhrapatrika, of the 14th August, says:—When important words in a speech are given one meaning and the speech is read, it conveys one sense, and when the same words are given a different meaning altogether, the speech may convey quite a different sense. Mr. Tilak criticised only the Government officers and the Civil Service, and not the Government. If in the place of the former words, he used the latter one, he might certainly have been guilty. We fear that the injustice of giving a wrong meaning to his words has been done to him. If a criticism of the acts of the Governor down to the Police constables be construed as a criticism of the Government, then public life will become an impossibility. From a perusal of the abstract of the judgment, it seems as if the Magistrate took the security from Mr. Tilak because he was determined to take it, and not because there was a strong case made out against him. Even the Madras Times, which recommends that speeches like those of Mr. Tilak should be put an end to, is of opinion that some of the criticisms of Mr. Tilak which formed the subject of his prosecution, were not objectionable. It is unsatisfactory that the Magistrate considered even such criticisms as objectionable. We trust that the higher courts and the Government will do justice to Mr. Tilak.

Primary education.

39. The Vidyabhanu, of the 31st July, writes:—Every one knows that primary education is now at its lowest ebb in India. Our popular leaders, like the late Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale, have been moving heaven and earth to make the Government introduce a system of free and compulsory primary education throughout the country; but their efforts have not proved successful. It is no doubt true that the Government of India is spending five million rupees every year on education. But our opinion is that the major portion of it is spent unnecessarily. Numerous Inspectors have been appointed in order to improve education. But, instead of doing this, they are causing a good deal of confusion. They have not the time to inspect the village schools and even if they do so, it is only a superficial inspection. Then again the primary schools are under dual control. Education in these schools is supposed to be supervised by the departmental officials, while the funds required by them are supplied by the local institutions such as the Local Boards, District Boards and Municipalities. But if there are any defects in these schools, those who pay for them cannot remove them. This has to be done only through the departmental officials, and it often leads to rupture. Besides this, any amount of money is spent on putting up buildings for these schools. As has been observed by our patriot, the Hon'ble Mr. Pandit Madan Mohun Malaviya, a hungry man requires only food and he does not care much whether he gets it in a good leaf and in a good building. Our people want education badly and instead of giving education to a few and spending a lot of money on buildings, etc., the better course will be to spread education over a larger area, without attaching much importance to structures. But our own opinion is that there is no use of expecting the Government to do everything in the matter of education. The educated among us should see that local committees are formed in different places for starting and managing schools in villages.

VIDYABHANU, Konapet, July 31st, 1916.

The Swadesamitran, of the 2nd August, says:—All those interested in the advancement of this country cannot but sincerely deplore the fact that not more than 10 per cent of the people here are literate. Even where the Local Boards and Municipalities are willing to introduce free education within their jurisdiction, the Government hesitates to permit them to do so. In England, an attempt is made to prevail upon the Government to give pecuniary aid to such parents as are forced to put their children to work and thus deprive them of education merely because they have no other means of living. If, in a rich country like England, the Government finds it necessary to help poor parents, so as to enable their children to have education, much need not be said about a poor country like India.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

In continuing its comments upon this subject, the Vidyabhanu, of the 3rd August, suggests the revival of panchayats and the constitution of Taluk and District Committees for the purpose of managing the primary schools in the villages, and says that the Government should entrust these committees and panchayats with the power of dealing with the funds set apart for the spread of education in the country.

VIDHYABHANU, Konapet, Aug. 3rd, 1916.

The new School-Leaving Certificate Board.

40. Referring to the nominations made by His Excellency Lord Pentland to the SchooL-leaving Certificate Board for three years from the 15th July 1916, the Hindu Nesan, of the 10th August, says:—We do not see the necessity for the nomination of Mr. Mark Hunter and P. V. Seshu Ayyar to this Board. In their places the Headmaster of the Madrasa-i Azam and the Assistant Inspector of Schools in the city could have been chosen. Of the non-officials nominated, we would have preferred the Headmasters of the High School department in the Christian and the Pachayaippa's Colleges in the place of the Rev. Skinner and the Rev. Moffat.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 10th, 1916.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1916.

Reduction of the University course to three years.

41. Adverting to the statement said to have been made by the Hon'ble Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar at Chidambaram that he did not approve of the major portion of the life of Indian youths being spent in education, the Hindu Nesan, of the 11th August, remarks that the Honourable Member will be helping the student population materially if, in his capacity of Vice-Chancellor of the Madras University, he brings about a reduction of the University course to three years, as is the case in the new Mysore University. This paper adds that if a three years' course is introduced, there will only be three examinations, the Preliminary Arts examination at the end of the first year, the Intermediate in Arts examination at the end of the second year and the Bachelor in Arts examination at the end of the third year.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1916.

The Syndicate of the University, crest-fallen.

42. The Andhrapatrika, of the 16th August, has a leaderette under this heading in which, it observes:—There is no doubt that the judgment of the High Court is very just. Only, the conduct of the syndicate in having given room for such a judgment is questionable. It becomes only the members of the syndicate of the Madras University to waste public money in litigation, knowing that their action is wrong. This is a matter in which we think it is proper for the Fellows of the University to demand an explanation from the syndicate. While this case against the syndicate had been pending before the High Court, the Vice-Chancellor, who is a member of the syndicate, arbitrarily put a stop to the resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar. It is open to Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar to compel the Vice-Chancellor by a writ of a Court to have his proposition fully discussed and put to vote. If this also happens, there is no doubt that the reputation of our syndicate will become world wide.. The Honourable Justices of the High Court have, by their judgment, created an opportunity for such a course. It remains to be seen whether the members of our syndicate will thankfully avail themselves of the opportunity and win world wide reputation, or correct themselves. We trust that the Fellows of the University will not sleep over this matter, but try to set right the syndicate.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Aug. 5th, 1916.

Indian Universities.

43. The Kistnapatrika, of the 5th August, reports Mr. Gandhi to have said as follows in an interview with an Andhra:—The Indian Universities do not exist for us. They belong to the Government and are so many depots training men for Government service. They are not institutions capable of developing national wisdom, and are quite useless for us. We have to establish our own Universities. It will be madness to undertake to reform the present Universities. They are carrying out their object most creditably.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 12th, 1916.

Rhodes scholarships.

44. Referring to the statement of Mr. Asquith that he had no reason for recommending the allotment of the German Rhodes scholarships to parts of the Empire which at present were not being benefited, the Andhrapatrika, of the 12th August, says:—We have not of late read a more disappointing statement than this. Indians have manifested great intellectual abilities and have thus borne testimony to the greatness of the Indian intellect. It is unjust under such circumstances to say that there are no grounds for granting the Rhodes scholarships to the Indians. If the reason for this is that India is a dependency and that the Indians are a coloured race, it is impossible to believe that the angle of vision of the rulers has changed. It is to be regretted that Mr. Asquith has not afforded us an opportunity to show that we are in no way inferior to any European in intellect.

45. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 12th August, writes:—The total funds available for education from Government grants, fees, endowments, etc., amount to eight and a half crores; but the amount actually spent on education is only five crores and a half. If the full amount were to be utilised, the progress would have been far more satisfactory. It is regrettable that such large sums are allowed to lapse. In Bengal alone, 87½ lakhs remained unutilised. It is deplorable that even the Government of India is in the habit of allowing educational allotments to lapse. There is immense scope for the utilisation of funds for the spread of education among women, Muhammadans and depressed classes. We regret to note that the facilities created for the benefit of these are hardly commensurate with the avowals of sympathy regarding their backward condition.

The progress of education in British India.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 12th, 1916.

46. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 9th August, writes:—Nowhere else can we find the comfort and convenience enjoyed by British subjects and more especially the facilities afforded to the Indian people by our benevolent Government and that in spite of its being engaged in this dreadful worldwide war. The people can never repay their debt of gratitude not even by sacrificing their lives! The Government constantly keeps in view the improvement and welfare of the people.

Views of the Imperial Government regarding the education of defective children.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1916.

In issuing a circular regarding the education of defective children, the Imperial Government has given proof of its true sympathy with these unfortunates.

The editor in appreciating this step says, "We hope the Government will, after consulting the principal officials of Educational Department, consider this question and provide for the education and training of these helpless children.

(h) Railways.

47. Referring to this incident, the Lokapakari, of the 31st July, says:—It is really a high-handed act on the part of the Traffic Inspector to have beaten the Indian students instead of trying to prevent the disturbance. It is the Railway authories that seem to be at the bottom of the whole mischief. The Railway Board and the Government should now see that the Railway Companies in India are not justified in reserving a compartment for Eurasians.

The fracas at the Fort station.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 31st 1916.

48. A correspondent to the Sasilekha, of the 11th August, writes to say that owing to want of waggons, goods have been lying idle at the Gudur station for a long time past without being exported and that the representations of the Gudur merchants have been unheeded by the railway authorities.

Scarcity of railway waggons at Gudur.

SASILEKHA, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1916.

(k) General.

49. In the course of a long leader under this heading, the Lokopakari, of the 31st July, says:—There are numerous obstacles in the way of Indian students having higher education. The prohibitive cost of education has made it impossible for parents having small incomes to educate their boys. The constitution of the Indian Educational Department is not such as to help the Indians to have higher education. Even those students who succeed, in spite of these difficulties, in coming up find it difficult to get through the University examinations. This has been clearly proved by the heavy slaughter in the last Intermediate examination of this University. Besides these difficulties, the European Professors do not treat the students in the higher classes properly. They not only insult them but even go to the extent of beating them. The incidents in the Wesley College here, and the Colleges in Calcutta, can be quoted as instances of this. The reason for this is that these Professors consider themselves to be heaven-born beings and have not the breadth of view to realise that the Indians are as much British subjects as they are. But the spread of English education has opened the eyes of the Indians and they are ever on the alert to secure the rights to which they are entitled. As this spirit is shared even by the Indian students, English Professors should treat them with respect. If, instead of this, men like the Rev. Macphail, who described the Indian students who appeared for the last Intermediate examination as rikshaw coolies at the last meeting of the Senate, are to be appointed as Professors in Colleges, there can be no amity between the Professors and the students. Professors of the stamp of the Rev. Macphail should be removed from the Colleges, as it is the high-handed acts of these men that create discontent in the minds of the Indians against the British. As if all these will not do, the Educational authorities are introducing new text-books every year, with the object of patronising the editors and book-sellers. Even in the case of note-books, the students are forced to buy the costly books prescribed by the department. What an unjust order? The Hon'ble Mr. Paranjpe recently brought up a resolution in the Bombay Senate that the duty of choosing text-books should be left to the headmaster, because the existing system of leaving this matter in the hands of the Text-book Committee is causing serious hardship to the students. We heartily endorse this view. Our opinion is that it is the worst books that are being chosen by the Text-book Committee.

Indian students.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, July 31st, 1916.

Referring again to the use of the words "Rikshaw coolies" by the Rev. Macphail to denote the class of students in the last Intermediate examination, the same paper observes:—It is really strange that a teacher and a Missionary as he was, the Rev. Macphail should have lost his patience! Perhaps it did not strike him that it was discreditable for him to be a teacher of rikshaw coolies! The Government should censure and punish those Europeans who speak disparagingly of the Indians.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1916.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 4th August, refers to the difficulties experienced by the Indian students in England and says:—It is because the education imparted by the Indian Universities is not considered to be a sufficient passport for the Indians getting the higher appointments in any department here, they proceed to England to give a finish to their education. There is, no doubt, an association called the Indian Students' Advisory Committee in England. But this association is not able to help the Indian students to get admission into the colleges in England easily. The Indian students are not admitted by the industrial concerns in England to learn work in them. Considering the hardships to which the Indian students in England are subjected in the matter of prosecuting their studies, it appears a memorial has been presented to His Excellency the Viceroy detailing all the facts, and we hope he will make an impartial enquiry into the matter and redress the grievances of the Indian students.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1916.

The Lokopakari, of the 7th August, also comments in the same strain upon this subject.

SOUTH INDIAN MAIL, Madura, July 31st, 1916.

50. The Tamil supplement of the South Indian Mail, of the 31st July, writes:—It is now many months since the Under Secretary of State for India declared in Parliament that there would soon be a change for the better in the British angle of vision regarding India and yet we see no change. There were many occasions on which the British Government's attitude towards India could be plainly seen and on all those occasions it was clear that it has not changed a bit. In the course of his speech at the Guildhall on the occasion of the reception of the Australian Premier, Mr. Bonar Law, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, dwelt upon the sacrifices made by the Colonies in this war for Britain, and stated that, when there is a readjustment of rights and privileges of the different constituents of the empire after the war, the colonies would be given larger privileges than what they now enjoy, and that they would also be allowed to share the powers of the Imperial Government. If this is to be done and India is to continue in her present condition, we need not say that it will cause a great deal of discontent among the Indians. It is a known fact that the colonies have never regarded India as a unit of the British Empire, and that they have been preventing the Indians from getting into their territory and otherwise ill-treating them very much. If these colonies are now allowed to exercise some of the powers of our rulers, we cannot say what will be the condition of India. Now comparing the advantages Britain is deriving from the colonies and India respectively, a little consideration will show that while the duty of protecting the colonies entails some expenditure on the empire without any corresponding advantages, India is, as a matter of fact, enriching the coffers of the mother country. Even in the war, India has been helping Britain a great deal and if she has not done more, it is due to her poverty. Considering the fact that both in extent and population, India stands foremost among the different units of the empire, it is most unfair on the part of the British Ministers to omit India altogether in discussing about the readjustment of the rights and privileges of these units after the war. We hope the British Government will, in the future at least, change its attitude towards India.

The British angle of vision regarding India.

The new Madras Legislative Council.

51. The Swadesamitran, of the 1st August, expresses its regret at the small number of non-officials nominated to this Council and says:—In Bombay and Bengal, the number of non-officials in the Legislative Council is larger than their number in Madras. We are sorry that Lord Pentland has not attached any weight to the demand of the popular leaders that the non-official element in the local Legislative Council should be strengthened this time.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1916.

Reverting to this subject, the Swadesamitran, of the 2nd August, says:—Of the elected non-officials in the new Council, four are Europeans, and of the nominated members, two are Europeans and one a Eurasian. If these are left out of account, there are only 21 non-official Indians, of whom three are Muhammadans. Thus of the 45 members in the Council, 21 are Indians and 18 Hindus. Though in name there are only 17 members on the side of the Government, the Europeans and Eurasians who number seven this time will usually vote only on the side of the Government. So on occasions when the Government and the public differ, 24 members will vote for the Government and 21 on the other side. Thus a resolution brought by any of the non-official members does not stand the chance of being passed. Lord Morley stated that the object of reforming the Legislative Councils in India was to invest real authority in the hands of the non-official members and to make them realise their responsibility in the Council. We believe the non-official members are quite prepared to realise their responsibility. But it looks as if the Government hesitates to give real authority in their hands. The Government officials seem to regard the non-officials more as an opposition than as the spokesmen of the people; an incident which occurred in the United Provinces Legislative Council last week can be quoted as an instance in point. The Hon'ble Mr. Chintamani brought up a resolution that the Government should reconsider the revision of land assessment in the Allahabad Division, and the only argument adduced by the First Member of the Revenue Board, who opposed it, was that as the mover did not represent the Allahabad Division, his opinion could not be taken and he never attempted to reply to the points raised by the mover in favour of his resolution. What did it matter which division the Honourable Member represented? the only thing the officials had to note was whether he gave expression to the opinions and grievances of the ryots, whose interests he advocated. Instead of doing so, they browbeat the Honourable Member with specious arguments. At any rate, this was not the intention of those who reformed the Legislative Councils. Another instance may also be quoted in this matter. At the last meeting of the Bombay Legislative Council, it was proposed by the non-officials that the consideration of a Bill to amend the Abkāri Act might be adjourned, pending the ascertainment of certain facts which were not available then. The Government officials would not consent to this. When the Official Members in the Council would not give in even in trifling matters like this, how can they be expected to be conscious of the powers and responsibility of the non-official members in the Council?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

The last meeting of the local Legislative Council.

52. Referring to the proceedings of this meeting, the Hindu Nesan, of the 2nd August, observes:—The business at this meeting comprised only the taking of oath by the members, the announcement of the dates of assent to certain Acts by the Governor and the Viceroy, and the introduction of a small Bill to amend the Presidency Small Causes Court Act and the Madras City Civil Court Act. We do not know what point is gained by convening a meeting like this only in name. It is now five months since the previous meeting took place and the next meeting can be held only after the Government comes down from the hills. Thus, no meeting at which popular grievances can be brought to the notice of the Government will be held for nearly nine months more and the next meeting of the council will surely be too full of business. This crowding of business at one meeting could have been avoided if steps had been taken to include some important subjects now engaging the attention of the public in the agenda of this meeting. Lord Pentland and his colleagues need not have come down from the hills to have a meeting in name and run up again in hot haste like this. This formal meeting could have been held even in Ootacamund and the additional members would have been only too glad to enjoy the cool climate of Ootacamund for a day or two, without the necessity of transacting any business.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 1st, 1916.

Mr. Tilak and the Government.

53. The Hindu Nesan, of the 1st August, is surprised at the Government of Bombay having declined to give a passport to Mr. Tilak to proceed to England to conduct his case against Sir Valentine Chirol and says:—If Mr. Tilak is prevented from going to England now, he is sure to lose his case and suffer serious loss. It is not fair on the part of the Government to refuse a permit, without assigning any reason for doing so. The action of the Government gives room to two complaints. The first is that it makes Mr. Tilak lose his case and the second is that it tries to help Sir Valentine Chirol as much as possible. We do not know why the Government of Bombay has issued an order which gives room to this dubious interpretation.

PRAPANCHA MITRAN, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1916.

The Prapancha Mitran, of the 4th August, also expresses its surprise at the action of the Government of Bombay and observes:—We do not know on what ground the Government of Bombay has refused to give a passport to Mr. Tilak to proceed to England. For aught we know, it can have no connection whatever with the present war and yet this system of issuing passports to people proceeding to foreign countries was introduced only as a result of the war. We are afraid that, in the absence of the publication of the grounds on which the passport has been refused, an impression is created in the minds of the people that the Government has taken this action in order to help Sir Valentine Chirol and prevent Mr. Tilak from successfully prosecuting his case against this gentleman. We regret very much that the Government of Bombay should be giving room to such an impression. As long as the Government holds back the reasons for its action, we should consider it to be an unreasonable one. We have only to presume that all the hardships, to which Mrs. Annie Besant and Mr. Tilak are now subjected are due to their efforts to secure swaraj for India. The word swaraj seems to terrify the Government of Bombay and that is why it has ruled that Mrs. Annie Besant should not enter that Presidency and that Mr. Tilak should not leave India. It is rumoured that it was the fear that Mrs. Besant and Mr. Tilak would go to England and lay bare the defects in the Government here before the British public, which made the Government of Bombay prevent Mr. Tilak from going to England, and that the Government proposes to intern Mrs. Besant in some place on the same grounds We do not know how far this is true. Anyhow this action of the Government of Bombay has rendered the action of the Government of Madras in demanding security from New India a very trifling one.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1916.

The Lokopakari, of the 7th August, also raises its voice against the action of the Government of Bombay, and hopes that Lord Chelmsford will interfere and have the order cancelled, considering the esteem in which Mr. Tilak is held by the Indians and the discontent that will be caused by this action.

54. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 12th August, writes:—Mr. Bhupendra Nath Basu who got 25 votes is second only to Surendra Nath Banerjea in point of ability. He is a most conscientious and straightforward man and an orator of unparalleled fame. He has suffered imprisonment in the cause of the country. His patriotism is such that he is worthy even to be an emperor. He is fit to be the representative not only of Bengal but of the whole of India. We have as great reason to rejoice at his success as we have reason to regret Mr. Bannerjea's failure. The other successful candidate, namely, Mr. Sita Nath Roy, has many acquaintances among the European voters; 16 out of the 23 votes he got were from Europeans. He may therefore be regarded as a representative of the Europeans. However that may be, we are exceedingly glad to learn of Mr. Basu's success.

The Imperial Council elections.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 12th, 1916.

55. Quoting with satisfaction the statement of Sir Thomas Holland to the South Indian Chamber of Commerce that industrial education was not imparted to a sufficiently large extent in this country, the Swadesamitran, of the 2nd August, observes:—This statement deserves to be noticed both by the people and the Government. It is to be noted that the statement has been made by the President of a Commission, which has been appointed for the purpose of enquiring about the facilities for improving the industries and trade of India. Do we not know that many students, who, after finishing their secondary education, are unable to have collegiate education, roam about in search of employments in any office, having no other means of eking out a livelihood? Will it not be beneficial to such students, if there are facilities for them to get into some kind of industrial or trade concern? Leaving this alone, all of us know that the economic struggle between countries will become acute after the end of this war and that European countries are sure to have a keen competition with each other. Though India may not be able to share in this struggle, should she not be able at least to convert her innumerable products into mercantile commodities? We require efficient workmen for this purpose. Sir Thomas Holland has stated clearly that there is no foundation whatever for the belief on the part of some people that it is hard to find competent workmen in India and that, even if workmen are available, they are not intelligent. As observed by him the Tata's Iron Factory has proved that Indian workmen will be able to do any work satisfactorily, if they are given sufficient education. Thus the only thing required for India to improve materially is industrial education for her children. Apart from helping India to improve her industries, this education increases the earning capacity of the labourers, which will, in its turn, do away with the necessity of Indian labourers proceeding to foreign countries for purposes of living. When the Indians stay in the country and help not only to improve their own prospects but also the prospects of the country, India will easily get rid of her poverty and become rich like other countries in the world.

The industrial advancement of India.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

Referring to the statement of Sir Gordon Fraser in his speech welcoming Sir Thomas Holland in the Madras Chamber of Commerce, that India should be content with such industrial pursuits as are accessories to the main manufacture of articles and that, if foreign articles are cheaper than those made here, the Indians should go in only for them, the Swadesamitran, of the 7th August, writes:—If this principle had been followed, no country in the world, which are now in an opulent condition, would have come up Every country has improved itself only by throwing obstacles in the way of foreign articles getting into it and competing with indigenous ones. When in olden days, there was a great demand for Indian muslins and calicoes in England, a heavy import duty was levied on these articles in order to foster local manufactures. Our plea is that the same course should be adopted even in India. It may be that Indian-made articles are a little costly in the beginning. But if a heavy import duty is levied on foreign articles, the question of demand and supply is sure to bring down the price of the Indian articles soon. As far as cloth is concerned, the Government of India has accepted the justice of our plea. We are really glad to find that Sir Thomas Holland expressed his dissent from Sir Gordon Fraser in his view. If the Commission of which Sir Thomas Holland is the President will act upon the principles laid down by him, the Indians will worship him and the other members of the Commission as their guardian angels.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1916.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

Separate representation for the Indian Christians.

56. Referring to a deputation representing the Indian Christian community which recently waited upon the Viceroy and pressed its claims for having separate representatives in the Legislative Councils and the sympathetic reply of the Viceroy thereto, the Swadesamitran, of the 2nd August, says:—Though the Indian Christians are very few in number, they form an important class by themselves in view of their educational qualifications, and we are glad that Lord Chelmsford has promised to consider their prayer for giving them a representative in the Legislative Councils, when the question of reforming these councils is next taken up. This shows that the Viceroy is convinced of the reasonableness of the prayer of the Christians. If so, why could not he try to redress their grievance immediately, as far as it lies in his power? Lord Morley has stated that the power of nominating additional members has been conferred upon the Government only to make it possible for small communities like the Christians, the Buddhists and the Eurasians to have their representatives in the council. Why cannot the Provincial Governments exercise this power and nominate an Indian Christian member? Why has not a member of this community been nominated to the local Legislative Council? The Archbishop of Madras, who has been nominated to a seat in this council, may be said to be a representative of the Christians. But whatever may be his merits, he cannot be taken to be the representative of the Indian Christians. We hope the Provincial Governments will act on the view of the Government of India at least in the future.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 5th, 1916.

License to sell liquor.

57. The Swadesamitran, of the 5th August, dwells upon the evils of making the District Collector the final authority to grant licenses for selling liquor in this country and welcomes the system followed in Ceylon, where this power is given to what are called Licensing Boards comprising both officials and non-officials, the latter, however, being in the majority, as a better one on the ground that, as long as the power of collecting the revenue and the power of granting these licenses are centered in the same individual, there is no possibility whatever of any reduction in the consumption of drink by the people.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1916.

A new order of the Bengal Government.

58. The Swadesamitran, of the 7th August, regrets to learn that the Government of Bengal has issued an order that, if there is any reason to suspect that any one is leaving any place in that Presidency with the object of endangering the safety of British India or the people therein, he should be prevented from leaving the place and that it has appointed eight officers of the Criminal Investigation Department to enforce this order. This paper thinks that there is every chance of this order being enforced even in the case of innocent persons, inasmuch as the power of enforcing it is in the hands of the Police, and implores the Government to issue strict instructions in the matter, so that only those persons, in whose case there is a reasonable ground for suspicion, will be affected by it.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 7th, 1916.

The Presidentship of the next Congress

59. The Swadesamitran, of the 7th August, condemns the action of the Madras Provincial Congress Committee in having chosen Diwan Bahadur L. A. Govindaraghava Ayyar as the President of the next congress in preference to Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya of Salem, who is, in the opinion of this paper, better fitted to occupy this position, and expresses the hope that the other Congress Committees will ignore the one-sided choice of the Madras Committee and nominate Mr. Achārya as the President with one voice.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 8th,

The Hindu Nesan, of the 8th August, also expresses the same view.

60. The Hindu Nesan, of the 8th August, regrets that even in electing two members to the Imperial Legislative Council, the non-official members of the local Legislative Council should have allowed personal considerations to sway their choice, and that they should have ignored the claims of Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya of Salem, who has earned a name of being a bold and impartial critic of the Government.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1916.

The Madras representatives in the Imperial Legislative Council.

The Swadesamitran, of the 8th August, reproduces the remarks of the Bengalee, the West Coast Spectator, the West Coast Reformer and the Hindu on this subject, expressing the same view.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 8th, 1916.

61. The Vedanta Deepika * for July observes:—Justice Woodroffe of the Calcutta High Court seems to have said that it is the Hindu religion that agrees on all fours with the principles underlying the western educational system and this opinion is shared by many European and American scholars. But of what avail is that for us? The Indians are politically a subject nation. So their religion and culture are not admired by the Europeans. Many of the high European officials do not have a regard for the Hindu religion on account of the arrogance of their position, the ignorance of the ordinary people over whom they exercise sway and their own ignorance of Indian culture. The Christian Missionaries have come to this country only for the purpose of destroying the religion of the Indians. Many Indians who have been educated by these Missionaries are beginning to have the same idea about the Indian religion as the Missionaries. This is in keeping with the times and there is no use of thinking about it. One of the charges laid at the door of the Hindu religion is that it does not advocate forcible conversion of other religionists as Christianity and Muhammadanism do. These latter religions base their principles on the religious history of the Jews. This history shows that the Jews were mercilessly harsh to other races. The Muhammadans destroyed the Roman and Persian Empires only on account of the difference of religion between them and their subject races. They forcibly converted the Romans and Persians to Muhammadanism. They invaded India on several occasions, plundered sacred shrines, killed several people and eventually conquered India itself. They destroyed the temples of the Indians and converted many Hindus to Muhammadanism. The Christians are doing the same thing, mainly in America and to a little extent in other countries. The Hindu and Buddhist religions never had this reputation. As pointed out by Lala Lajput Rai in an article contributed by him to the Modern Review, the present day education aims only at enabling the Indians to eke out a livelihood and does not help them in the least in undertaking vedantic research. What is the use of our thinking about the present condition of our religion, when we have voluntarily handed over our boys to people who are hostile to our religion, with the glamour that we are helping them thereby to make a living?

VEDANTA DEEPIKA, Madras, July 1916.

The Hindu religion.

62. Referring to the lines laid down by the Government for the guidance of the commission which is to enquire about the facilities for the advancement of industries in India, the Vidyabhanu, of the 7th August, writes:—The essential factors required for the industrial advancement of any country are raw products, labourers, capital and scientific knowledge. Of these, there is no dearth of raw products in India, nor of skilled labourers. There was a time when the skill of the Indian artisans attracted the admiration of the world. But now they are not cared for. As a large number of machine-made articles are now imported from the western countries, there are none to buy hand-made articles, though they are indigenous, as they are naturally more costly. No wonder then that many of the industries of this country have become extinct. But the artisans continue and, if they are trained a little in modern methods they will soon become experts in their line. For doing this, it is necessary to open industrial schools. The one or two schools which now exist

VIDYABHANU, Konapet, Aug. 7th, 1916.

The Indian industries.

* Received in the current week.

will not do. The Government should start a large number of industrial schools in the country. The third requisite for industries to thrive is capital. Even this is not wanting in India. But there are two obstacles in the way of the Indian capitalists boldly investing their money in industrial concerns. One is their want of knowledge of the greater profits they can derive in industrial concerns than in agriculture and this is due partly to the fact that they have for a long time been accustomed only to agriculture. The other impediment is their want of union and mutual confidence which are necessary for the advancement of any industry. So, the only way to make the people boldly come forward to invest their money in industries is for the Government of India and the Provincial Governments to follow the example of Germany and Japan and take up the responsibility of running some industries. If this is done, any amount of private money will be forthcoming. The fourth factor, scientific knowledge, can be obtained only by getting experts from foreign countries to put our men in the way in the beginning. We hope the commission now appointed will consider all these things and make some constructive proposals. Even if all the four factors mentioned above are secured, the Indian industries cannot thrive successfully, if an import duty is not levied on foreign articles, so as to prevent their competing with indigenous articles.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1916.

In the course of a leader under the heading "The trade and industries of India", the Swadesamitran, of the 11th August, says:—As arrangements are being made to prevent the Austrian and German goods from being imported into the territories of the Allies for a stated period after the war, the trade between India and Great Britain is bound to increase in volume, and it is therefore the duty of Great Britain to give a helping hand to India, which is now far behind other countries in trade and industries, to rise to the occasion and be able to do justice to her position in the empire. Numerous articles are now being imported into India from Japan and America. If this is allowed to continue, it may not be easy for the indigenous industries of this country to thrive. As observed by Sir Roper Lethbridge once, how can the Indian capitalists be expected to invest their money boldly in Indian industries, if there is always the fear of their being crushed by the competition of foreign articles? As suggested by him, it is the duty of the Government of India to give an assurance to the public that steps will be taken to prevent such foreign competition. If this is done, we can safely count upon many of our local industries thriving soon.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1916.

The Report of the Public Service Commission.

63. The Swadesamitran, of the 11th August, reproduces the comments of the Bombay Chronicle, which learns with surprise that it has been decided to publish the Report of the Public Service Commission and to bring into force immediately the non-contentious recommendations embodied therein, and raises its voice against such publication on the ground that, in view of the important changes which have occurred since 1914, the recommendations of this commission may not fit in exactly with the existing conditions.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 12th, 1916.

The Report of the Public Service Commission.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 12th August, learns that the India Office has undertaken to publish the report of the Public Service Commission, and says:—When asked why it should be published before the close of the war, Lord Islington said that the war may continue for a long time yet, and that it is unnecessary to postpone the publication till its termination. While Mr. Asquith and others expect an early termination of the war, it is curious to hear from Lord Islington that it may last for a long time. India expects great concessions at the hands of England on the termination of the war. If at this juncture, the report in question is published, the rulers may, when the question of concessions comes up for consideration after the war, be disposed to say:—"We carried out the suggestions of the Public Service Commission only the other day. It is therefore not proper to grant further concessions so soon." The authorities will thus blind the English people and blunt their enthusiasm. It will be well for the Secretary of State for India and also Lord Chelmsford to consider deeply whether it is not expedient to postpone the publication of the report of the Public Service Commission till after the war.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 12th, 1916.

The condition of the labourers in this country.

64. The Swadesamitran, of the 12th August, writes:—Our readers may remember the statement made by Sir Thomas Holland in the Madras Chamber of Commerce that after the war every country forming part of the British Empire should be prepared to manufacture all the articles required by it. We hope that proper steps will soon be taken to enable India to be in a position to manufacture all the articles required by her. This will mean that many industries, which are now carried on in western countries, will be carried on in India also in course of time. In copying the western methods connected with industries, some evils appertaining to those methods may also be naturally copied and one such evil is that the capitalists gain large profits, while the labourers are not paid adequate wages. This state of affairs exists even in India now; but precautionary steps should be taken immediately to prevent its getting worse. It is stated that Japan has get over this difficulty and that the labourers there live happily. The policy adopted by Japan in this matter should be ascertained and applied to India. If the future industrial advancement of India is based on the prosperity of the labourer, the problem concerning the emigration of Indians to foreign countries will also have been solved.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 12th, 1916.

The Tilak case.

65. Referring to the judgment of the District Magistrate of Poona, binding over Mr. Tilak to be of good behaviour for one year with heavy securities, the Swadesamitran, of the 12th August, observes:—Though our readers have been closing following the progress of this case day by day, there was nothing in the proceedings to warrant the conclusion to which the magistrate has arrived and the undesirable remarks which he has made about Mr. Tilak at the end of his judgment. The public will not, in any way, agree with the magistrate in his opinion about the lectures of Mr. Tilak. Any how we are quite justified in saying that the method adopted by the Government of Bombay in getting rid of disloyalty and sedition is not a proper one. The following observation of Sir Francis Maclean, who was the Chief Justice in Bengal 18 years ago, and who had enough of experience in trying cases of sedition, is worthy of note here:—

"Ever since I came to India numerous remarks about sedition and the methods of suppressing it have fallen upon my ears. But it appears to me that there is only one way of suppressing sedition and that is to show sympathy for the people and to extend an unbounded sympathy for their wants, their grievances and their legitimate aspirations".

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1916.

The Government of India Act Amendment Bill.

66. The Andhraprakasika, of the 9th August, says:—By removing the two clauses in the Government of India Act Amendment Bill, that affected the interests of the Indians, the Joint Committee appointed to consider the measure have deserved the gratitude of the Indians, and have strengthened the confidence of the people in the British sense of justice. There are also certain unnecessary classes in the Bill, which the authorities will do well to omit also. Under the provisions of the Bill, Native Chiefs may be appointed to our Legislative Councils. The people and their leaders deem this provision unnecessary. We hope that the authorities will drop the Bill for the present and take it up for consideration after the war.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 12th, 1916.

Disabilities of Indian students in England.

67. The Andhrapatrika, of the 12th August, says:—We are very much pained to learn that Indian students who have proceeded to England to prosecute their studies there are treated with scant courtesy and are subjected to great disabilities. Those for instance who study for the Engineer's Examination and who have to gain practical knowledge by working in factories and workshops, are not admitted into them. The Oxford and Cambridge Colleges receive a certain remuneration from the Government of India for entertaining in them students preparing for the Indian Civil Service Examination. It is therefore improper that the authorities of these Colleges should treat the Indian students with disregard. We humbly pray that the Government of India and the Secretary of State for India will interfere on behalf of Indian students and see that their grievances are redressed.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1916.

Drunkenness.

68. In its leader on drunkenness, the Andhrapatrika, of the 11th August, says:—However good the intention of the Government may be, the means they adopt to put down drunkenness as far as possible has not produced the desired effect. Their officers have always been careful to see that the revenue derived by the Government from intoxicants does not suffer. . . . . The hours during which intoxicating liquors may be sold have not been so fixed as to make it in any measure inconvenient for the drunkard to get his drink. If the case of Madras is taken into consideration, it must be decided that the authorities have afforded special facilities for him. In this city generally, all toddy shops should be opened at 9 a.m. But a toddy shop at Oteri, and two others at Choolai should be opened at 7 in the morning. In these parts, poor coolies live in large numbers. It appears that these shops are specially intended for them. The authorities themselves have to say whether this is a measure calculated to discourage drunkenness or encourage it. In the matter of the location of shops, the authorities do not show much wisdom. In locating them, they only see that they are removed from the habitations of high officials, and that the noise that is characteristic of them does not disturb the sleep of any European. The discretion to locate them is not used in excluding only crowded places. Licenses are issued for opening toddy shops where people collect in large numbers on festive occasions. It is stated that shop No. 186 in Nungambakam may be located on the Sterling Road but not within a hundred yards of any bungalow occupied by a European. Why should a difference be observed between a European and an Indian in this matter? Shops are located so that they may not be a source of annoyance to civilised people, but not so that they may not attract drunkards. The efforts of the Government to reduce the evil of drinking being thus neutralised by the acts of their officers, drunkenness has always been on the increase. The representations of the Temperance Committees and the social reformers continue to be so many cries in the wilderness.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1916.

Indian questions.

69. Referring to a statement of Mr. Asquith that arrangements will be made to discuss Indian questions in the Parliament if desired, the Andhrapatrika, of the 11th August, says:—The foremost of all Indian questions is that of self-government. The higher authorities have recognised the legitimacy of the ideal of self-government. The Courts have decided that self-government is a legitimate aspiration of the people. But the Police and other officers say that it is sedition even to criticise the authorities and they try to bring to trouble even the loyal subjects of His Majesty for advocating the cause. There is the Defence of India Act which is agitating the country. Indians are deported in hundreds without reasons being assigned for so doing. There might be some wicked men among the deported, but the country believes that most of the deported persons are innocent. The question of an Indian army has been satisfactorily solved to some extent, but much remains to be done yet and the people pray that the same terms should be offered to the Indian army as to an Anglo-Indian army. Reuter does not say whether Mr. Asquith had all or any of these questions in his view when he made the statement referred to above. Reuter is so very brief that he seems he is sporting with our affairs.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 11th, 1916.

Suggestions of non-official members of Legislative Councils.

70. Referring to the statement of Sir Edward Gait of the Behar Legislative Council that he is in the habit of taking a list of the suggestions of the non-official members of the Council and considering how far they are capable of being adopted, the Andhrapatrika, of the 11th August, says:—Sir Edward Gait speaks in praise of the suggestions made by the non-official members at the Economic Conference and says that he accepted all of them. Will the local authorities here follow this practice of Sir Edward Gait?

The Ceylon Legislative Council.

71. Referring to the resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanathan of the Ceylon Legislative Council regarding the Acting Chief Justiceship in Ceylon, the Andhrapatrika, of the 14th August, says:—The resolution was put to vote and lost. But we believe that the mover stood firm and did a great good to the country by making it plain that the Indians will not be content with anything short of the liberal English methods of criticism. It is a good sign of the times that in Ceylon also Indians fight for their self-respect.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1916.

Self-government.

72. In its leader on local self-government in India, the Andhrapatrika, of the 15th August, remarks:—It is now 32 years since the law relating to local self-government was passed. It is ten years since the swaraj movement was set on foot. There have been small reforms, but they have not effected any improvement in the administration. If we rely upon such reforms, it will take centuries for the administration to improve. We cannot expect lovers of authority to effect any improvement in our self-governing institutions. It is the higher authorities and the people of England, whose freedom is their heaven, that should give us independence. They should not leave that work to be done by the lower authorities. We hope that neither the liberal-hearted Englishmen nor our leaders will fall into the error that India will obtain swaraj by small reforms. It is the grant of self-government and not anything else that can lead the Indians to the goal of self-government.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1916.

The grievances of the South African Indians.

73. Referring to the letter addressed to India on the subject of the grievances of the South African Indians in the matter of obtaining licenses for selling foodstuffs, the Andhrapatrika, of the 15th August, says:—Our brethren in South Africa are now carrying on an extensive trade in foodstuffs, laying out a large capital on it. The South African authorities are now imposing restrictions on the issue of licenses to them. If, for instance, an Indian has already one confectionary shop and wishes to open another, the authorities refuse to grant him a license to do so. Can anything be more unjust than this? If the present rules are a little harder, Indians in South Africa will lose their only means of sustenance, and be reduced to great difficulties. It is therefore highly essential that the authority of law should be invoked to safeguard the rights of our Indian brethren and restrict the arbitary powers of the municipalities in South Africa. The work of Mr. Gandhi in South Africa has to be continued. Indians should not therefore sleep over the matter, but should enlist Lord Chelmsford's sympathy, march another step forward, and help to bring about harmony in the Empire.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 15th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

74. The Andhrapatrika, of the 16th August, says:—It is stated in the Amrita Bazaar Patrika that a certain high official of this country has said that the Government of India had nothing to do with the restrictions placed on Mrs. Besant, but that the Madras and Bombay Governments were solely responsible for them. So far, so good. But it is difficult to understand how Lord Pentland and Lord Willingdon who were liberal-minded in the time of Lord Hardinge can now become narrow-minded.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1916.

Political agitation.

75. In its leader on the subject of political agitation in India, the Desabhimani, of the 13th August, says:—The educated classes fight among themselves in the Congresses and Conferences, but do not try to educate the masses in politics. It is why political agitation in this country does not produce the desired effect. Unless such agitation is conducted in the vernaculars, the masses cannot be expected to take any interest in it. They have now no idea of self-government under the British Raj. A knowledge of politics must spread among them, and this knowledge should be published in the vernaculars.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, Aug. 13th, 1916.

Only then can the goal be reached. Only when political agitation is conducted in the vernaculars by the people in general, the rulers will hear our grievances and grant us our legitimate wishes.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, Aug. 13th, 1916.

A Double Company of Bengal Infantry.

76. The Desabhimani, of the 13th August, is highly gratified to learn that the rulers have determined to form a double company of Bengali infantry and prays that this concession may be extended to the other Indian races also, and that the Indian and the English soldiers may be placed on an equal footing in the matter of the terms offered to them.

CHOUDARI, Chataparru, June and July 1916.

Indian arts and industries.

77. The issue of Choudari, for June and July last, in an article under this heading, states that, after the East India Company became king-makers, the trade and industries of India suffered at their hands. To support this, it gives what professes to be a Telugu version of Chapter I, Part II, of R. C. Dutt's work on the trade, industries and wealth of India, which contains extracts from the reports of English Governors such as Vansittart and Warren Hastings, of a Nawab of Bengal and of others, complaining of the misconduct and highhandedness of the servants of the East India Company. It closes with this passage :— The above extracts will do. English officers, English tradesmen, Mussalman Nawabs, Mussalman Collectors, Mussalman historians and other writers have all described these enormities in the same strain. The Bengalees suffered during the rule of the ancient Nawabs and at other times. But they had never known such gross iniquities and enormities.

This oppression spread to every village and to every loom. However much they might have suffered before, they could preserve their arts and industries and maintain their lives. But alas! What a sad fate overtook them after the advent of the Company! They lost their arts and industries and their very bread. They were reduced to destitution.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 12th, 1916.

Home Rule.

78. In a lengthy article under this heading, a correspondent of the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 12th August, subscribing himself a "patriot", writes :—During Lord Hardinge's regime both the Government and the people were conscious of the identity of interests between the rulers and the ruled. This was especially evident when Lord Hardinge fought for justice even to the extent of incurring the displeasure of the Home Government when he saw the contemptuous attitude of South Africa towards Indian immigrants. This led to the growth of sincere loyalty in the hearts of the Indians. When the Christian people themselves do not observe Christ's precept that we must do good to those that do us harm, it is not to be expected that others will follow this teaching. Some writers to the press say that some of the British have begun to think that the Indians are not sincere in their expressions of loyalty, that they are effeminate and fit only to be slaves. There are times when we begin to think how it is possible to love those who do not return our love. If loyal people are regarded as seditionists, their loyalty becomes sometimes converted into seditious designs. Discontent and irritation sometimes gives inordinate strength even to the weak. Even the weak who have been affecting mirth in the absence of strength and help, begin to remonstrate when opportunity arrives. As among families so among kingdoms the stupidity or waywardness of the men at the head leads to revolutionary changes. Every one knows how revolutions on a smaller scale arise almost everyday out of the hankering after gold, women and land. The bigger revolutions however have been recorded in history and we have, besides, the present European war as a living example. The weakness of the Allies at the outset and their invincibility at present is an instance in point. What is possible through love and tact can never be achieved through hatred or swaggering. Prince and peasant must alike realise the truth of this statement and try to win popular affection and confidence. All the wealth necessary for the protection of the Empire comes from the people and these must have the voice at least to suggest how that wealth may be utilised. It is this voice that has led England to her present eminence. It is the hope that Indians too will eventually obtain the democratic rights of Englishmen that has produced such unswerving loyalty. In India the administrators were at one time looked upon as so many Gods and they too in their turn were in the habit of paying equally high regard for popular opinion and used to conduct the administration wholly in accordance with the wishes of the people. The opinion of the panchayats prevailed in all matters. In villages too all local matters were settled under the panchayat system. The traces of it are still to be seen on festive occasions. Our country is by no means new to the Home Rule system. We are not strangers to democratic institutions. We had them from time immemorial. Latterly, however, we have been forgetting them partly owing to the introduction of British system of administration and partly from other causes. If autrocratic officials of the type of Lord Curzon should be sent to this country to hold responsible positions such as that of Viceroy and if they should find advisers like Mr. Valentine Chirol to guide them in the path of autocracy, India may very speedily gain Home Rule. Some people ask whether India is ever likely to obtain Home Rule when Ireland has failed to obtain it after agitating for 700 years. It is true that India and Ireland resemble each other in some respects but the difference in other respects is inexpressibly vast. One chief point of difference between the two is that Ireland has a population of 30 lakhs while the population of India is 300 millions. This one fact makes an ocean of difference. The British are a very politic people; clever in the art of Government. They know that true loyalty can come only out of true love. They are great adepts in punishing the wicked and protecting the good. They know that among educated Indians there are many who are capable statesmen as themselves. They also know how in northern India during Lord Curzon's regime even cart drivers became swadeshists in no time. If we wait patiently until the close of the war, and then pray for Home Rule, it seems likely that we shall have it. But it is most regrettable that in Bengal, the Punjab and some other provinces, some of the officials have acted in such a way as to bring about an estrangement between the Government and the people. It is to be hoped that the Viceroy and other officials will so conduct the administration as to render it as popular as in the time of Lord Hardinge and that nothing will be done to lacerate the affection between the Government and the people.

"The case against Lokamanya Tilak."

79. In an article under this heading, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 16th August, after giving a translation of the passages pointed out by Mr. Binning as seditious in the course of the summing up of the case, remarks:—We are unable to pass any comments on the result of the trial until the High Court have given their final decision thereon. We may observe, however, that Mr. Tilak's speech somewhat exceeded the bounds (of fair criticism) but the punishment inflicted is severe in view of his old age.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE', Bangalore, Aug. 16th, 1916.

The Pilgrims' Committee's Report.

80. In a leading article, commenting on the report of the Pilgrim Committee the Swadeshabhimani, of the 11th August, says:—We are unable to say whether anything has been gained by the investigations of the committee. The traveller best knows the discomforts he has to suffer. The overcrowding of carriages, the absence of adequate lavatory accommodation and water storage are the main grievances of the railway travellers and though these are more or less common to all railways in India, they are particularly bad in the railways of this presidency. The huddling of passengers like goods is part of the routine of the railway officers. The committee do not seem to have made any satisfactory suggestions for the removal of these grievances. The observations of the committee lead to the impression that these discomforts are the natural consequence of the enormous number of the places of pilgrimage in this Presidency. Instead of opening the eyes of the railway authorities to these discomforts, the Committee observe that the Railway Companies are already more alive to their duties than they can be asked to be and are better acquainted with the prevailing state of things than themselves. On reading these remarks, it seems to us that we cannot too warmly praise the wisdom of the Committee. It is like telling a patient who wants a diet recommended to him that he is wise enough to know what is good for his own health and may follow his own wishes. When we were already so painfully aware how far the railway company was alive to its responsibilities, we did not think that any further commendation of its practices were needed from the Committee. We are thus constrained to observe that the railway authorities pay no attention to the comforts of the passengers and the Committee too has failed to make any suggestions to remedy their grievances.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Aug. 9th, 1916.

The Pilgrims' Committee's report.

In reviewing the report of the Pilgrims' Committee, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 9th August, draws attention to the inconvenience and hardships to which pilgrims, especially the third-class passengers, are subjected, endorses the opinions of the committee that lady clerks should be employed to issue tickets to women, and that a small tax might be imposed on pilgrims for the improvement of sanitation in places frequented by them, and hopes that several benefits will accrue to the pilgrims as the result of the committee's efforts.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 11th, 1916.

Referring to the same subject, the Manorama, of the 11th August, comments favourably on the report of the committee, though it regrets that their views regarding the facilities given to the pilgrims by the railway authorities are at variance with public opinion thereon, and hopes that measures will be taken by the Government to give effect to the suggestions of the committee.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Aug. 12th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Kerala Patrika, of the 12th August, also points out that the committee do not seem to have realised sufficiently well the difficulties and inconveniences of the third-class passengers, draws special attention to the hardships of the pilgrims from Malabar to Rameswaram and Palni, and hopes that the recommendations of the committee will be given effect to by the Government at no distant date.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Aug. 15th, 1916.

Referring to the same subject, the Kerala Udayam, of the 15th August, also regrets that the committee do not appear to have realised sufficiently well the various inconveniences and hardships of the pilgrims, inasmuch as they have left to the railway authorities themselves the consideration and settlement of questions relating thereto, and observes that it cannot understand why the committee should be reluctant to blame the railway authorities when they are at fault.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 11th, 1916.

Thefts in Bombay harbour.

81. Referring to the news of the detection and conviction of the thefts committed by some employees of the Transport department in the Goods sheds of Bombay harbour, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 11th August, writes:—In the first place whether it is theft, robbery or forgery, any offence is shameful. It is a greater shame to rob articles which were intended for the comfort of the heroes who are sacrificing their lives for the benefit of the country in Mesopotamia. It is worse that these thefts were committed by the very officers who were set to guard these goods. It is far more heinous still that these officers belonged to such a civilized race as the Europeans. From the names of the offenders we must infer that the offenders are not Indians but Europeans. These men were selected for the work, probably because the Indians could not be credited with being trustworthy enough. How far these men can be trusted must now be evident. There is another fact to be noticed in this connection. Two out of the six accused are old offenders, and one of them had thrice been to gaol! The other only once! It is evident from this how indifferent the Criminal Investigation Department people are to these matters. It is most deplorable that the Criminal Investigation Department officers who shadow every political offender and gather every detail of his past history should have remained so totally ignorant of the previous conviction of these European offenders who are guilty of such abhorrent deeds.

82. Writing on this subject a correspondent of the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 18th August, remarks as follows:— "Mr. Tilak is certainly the greatest patriot among Indians and his loyalty to the British Government is unquestionable, as will be seen from his speeches and no less from the defence he got up in the case against him which has just come to a close. It is his desire that while the permanence of the British rule in India is ensured the actual Government of the country should be conducted according to democratic principles. His speeches in Belgaum and elsewhere do not lead us to conclude that he has the slightest trace of enmity in his mind against our rulers. But if a demand for Home Rule is in itself an act of sedition then it may as well be said that along with Mr. Tilak all the 450 millions of the Indian people are seditionists, seeing that the desire for Home Rule is quite as strong among them as in Mr. Tilak." The writer next gives a brief account of his two previous convictions and proceeds to observe:—"A careful perusal of the proceedings of this case goes to show that Mr. Tilak is the best friend of the British Empire and that it is his opinion that every Indian should consider it his duty to work for Home Rule under the British protection. This view has the support of many among the British people as well. I am therefore of opinion that in taking the heavy security for good behaviour from Mr. Tilak the District Magistrate of Poona has set at naught the noble traditions of the British race. It is quite necessary that the High Court or the Government of Bombay should reconsider this matter and have the order cancelled; for, otherwise it will not conduce to the continuance of the sincere feelings of love that now exist between the rulers and the ruled in India. I trust that the attention of His Excellency the Viceroy will be drawn to this matter.

The Tilak security case.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 18th, 1916.

83. In an article purporting to point out that the action of the Madras and Bombay Governments against Mrs. Besant has resulted in increasing her fame and popularity, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 18th August, says:—Those who have real experience of the world are able to tell us that if people who are righteous in thought, word and deed are looked down upon by the Government, the contempt operates as exaltation. It is not easy to deny the truth of this. Those who are righteous, patriotic and truthful have always the support of providence at their back. We hope that His Excellency the Viceroy and his advisers will ponder over this fact.

Mrs. Besant's popularity.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 18th, 1916.

84. Referring to the ensuing congress, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 9th August, hopes that at its sittings the unsuitability and severity of the Defence of India Act and of the Press Act will be brought home to the minds of the people, and that the congress will do the needful in these matters.

The ensuing congress.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Aug. 9th, 1916.

85. The Chakravarti, of the 12th August, condemns the policy of the Punjab Government, who have now sanctioned the admission of Indian Christians to high posts in the army, while refusing the same privilege to Hindus and Muhammadans, whom the Government seem to regard as fit only to serve as insignificant officers and common soldiers, and to die at the battlefield under the leadership of whitemen.

Punjabi Christians in the army.

CHAKRAVARTI, Cochin, Aug. 12th, 1916.

86. Referring to the steps taken against Mrs. Besant, Mr. Tilak and a Muhammadan priest in Northern India by the respective Governments, the Lokaprakasam, of the 14th August, says:—These actions have produced a great sensation among the Indians. It is high time that the Parliament should examine the soundness and expediency of the policy adopted at the very commencement of Lord Chelmsford's administration towards the Indians, who are ready and willing to sacrifice immense wealth and their very lives too in this terrible war.

The Government and the Indian leaders.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Aug. 14th, 1916.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Aug. 14th, 1916.

Order demanding security for good behaviour from Mr. Tilak.

87. Referring to the order demanding security for good behaviour from Mr. Tilak the Lokaprakasam, of the 14th August, dwells upon his various good qualities and his valuable services to the country, which have made him so popular among the people as to induce them to present him with a lakh of rupees on the occasion of his sixtieth birthday, and thinks that the order, which has caused considerable pain to the Indians, was due to the fact that he was about to proceed to England to conduct the case against Sir Valentine Chirol. It also adds that there can be no doubt that the case will be vigorously proceeded with, be the cause of the order what it may.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Aug. 15th, 1916.

The enlistment of Bengalee youths.

88. Referring to the announcement of Lord Carmichael at the last meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council that the Government of India have sanctioned the formation of two companies of soldiers, composed of Bengalee youths, the Keralodayam, of the 15th August, points out that all patriotic Bengalees should congratulate themselves on the announcement, which, it is hoped, will be the means of preventing respectable Bengalee youths from taking part in anarchical movements, and observes that the Bengalees ought to do everything possible for the successful formation of the two companies, so that the right, which they owe to the agitation of the Indian leaders and to Government's great solicitude for their welfare, may not prove to be an abortive one.

MUKHBIR-I-DAKHAN, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1916.

The Arts Commission in Madras.

89. The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 9th August, in commenting on the speech made by Sir Thomas Holland, President of the Arts Commission, says:—"We trust that the Government will not grudge suffering a little loss in the matter of the promotion and advancement of Indian arts. For example, so long as English craftsmen are able to send their articles without let or hindrance to India, local progress will be impossible. The same thing will be made in both places but European manufacturers will, by reason of cheap prices, advance, while Indians, because of higher prices, will fail. For instance, although paper is manufactured in some parts of India, the general public do not buy it, because it is dearer than the English article. The same holds good in regard to fabrics. Certain Indian-made stuffs cannot compete with the European article.

We hope Sir Thomas's Commission of Enquiry will be a success and that the proposals it makes and the measures it adopts will result in great benefit to the country. We are certain that all India will rise and give effect to its proposals and that the practical ideas of great companies will begin to materialise. It will be advisable for us to think less about politics. The desire for Home Rule is still premature. Political revolutions are easily effected, but it is very difficult to bring about economic changes. This opportunity has come to hand after a long period of hope and expectation and inasmuch as the Government has now extended the hand of sympathy and help, we, on our part, should not be backward in seizing it.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 9th, 1916.

A separate electorate.

90. The Qaumi Report, of the 9th August, writes:—The friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans have been tested in the United Provinces and now the attractions of "Home Rule" are making the people mad. Accordingly in the councils there are separate elections for Muhammadans and Hindus. On the same principle further progress has been made in the United Provinces, Muhammadans and Hindus have been given separate electorates in municipalities and the Hindus themselves took an active part in the moving and supporting this excellent separation. But, as we have already stated in these columns, the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malavia, with loud vociferations, raised the standard of opposition and gathered his community beneath it. The effect of this disagreeable commotion was that some of the Hindus, who had supported a "separate electorate", seceded it and by their repeated words and actions prematurely roused the Mussalmans and made them conscious of the fact that the treatment, which they now receive is meted out to them at a time when law prevails and regulations are observed, but as regards the treatment they are likely to get when the period of "Home Rule" comes, the less said the better!

III.—Legislation.

The Bill to amend the Indian Consolidation Act.

91. The Swadesamitran, of the 2nd August, welcomes the news by Reuter that the Select Committee to whom this Bill was referred has recommended the omission of the two clauses which proposed to abolish the right of British subjects to sue the Secretary of State for India in a court of law and the restriction that a Member of the Executive Councils in India should not have any connection with a mercantile concern and observes:—Though the first clause, referring to the right to sue the Secretary of State, was opposed even by the English Chambers of Commerce in India, the objection to the other clause relating to Members of Executive Councils was raised only by the Indians. As both these clauses have now been deleted by the Select Committee, we deem it to be a victory won by the Indian public opinion and welcome it as such. It was stated that the first clause was necessitated by a decision of the Privy Council in the case of Mr. Moweut. When this clause itself has been deleted, there is no necessity for introducing the less important changes embodied in the Bill. So we hope the consideration of the Bill will be postponed for the present.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 2nd, 1916.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 3rd August, and the Prapanchamitran, of the 4th August, reproduce the above comments.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 3rd, 1916; Prapanchamitran, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1916.

The proposed extension of the Defence of India Act to Madras.

92. In raising its voice against the proposed extension of this Act, the Swadesamitran, of the 4th August, says that there is no necessity whatever for applying to this Presidency, the loyalty of which was admitted by Lord Pentland at the last meeting, of the Legislative Council, the provisions of an Act, which is meant only to deal with conditions connected with the war and which has no reference whatever to politics.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 4th, 1916.

The India Press Act.

93. The issue of Choudari, for June and July last, in an article under this heading, says:—As a result of the breach of order consequent on the agitation against the partition of Bengal in 1907-1908, this Act was passed in 1910, during the time of Lord Curzon. Some seditionists were fitly punished for the sedition that had then been rife in the country. Some innocent persons also that were guilty in the eyes of the authorities had to submit to hard punishments such as deportation. Some had to undergo death sentences. . . . . We are fully of opinion that a weapon forged for culprits should not be used against the innocent. We do not say that villains should go unpunished, or that journals, books or such other instruments that inculcate breach of order or incite sedition should be condoned. . . . . Where is the occasion for the application of the Press Act, in these peaceful times when loyalty prevails, and the country looks eagerly forward to a promiseful future? Will it fail to be felt as a blighting of the popular hopes? By what word shall we designate the Act whereby a security of Rs. 2,000 has been demanded of New India which has been justly discussing the rights that subsist between the rulers and the ruled, and the need of self-government for the people as a means of affording administrative facilities. When, in May last, the Commanding Officer of Fort William was interviewed by Babu Surendranath Bannerji and some others on the question of admitiing Bengalees into the army, he remarked: "You belong to a conquered race. . . . . We cannot admit those Indians to the military service who are trying to break their bondage of subjection. . . . . There is no difference between him (an Englishman) and the English people from a national point of view. But your position is altogether different. You are alien to us and so we are to you. . . . ." There is, of course, no such sense of difference in the minds of the rulers. All the same how are the populace to blame if from the racial pride reflected in such rash utterances of the intermediary European officials they erroneously infer that the Government is also entirely unsympathetic to the Indians? How can a country be improved without mutual affection and gratitude subsisting between the rulers and the ruled? How can administration go on? . . . . If really the Government loves its people, this Press Act vitiates it. O, what an evil hour it must have been conceived in! It has caused anguish to many a saintly heart. How many excellent popular journals devoted to the well-being of the country have fallen victims to it? The evil has petrified and grown into huge piles. When it has come into collision with the rocky heart of Mrs. Annie Besant who has dedicated to India her life, the sole mission of which is philanthropy, it gave rise to a loud peal that has reverberated over the whole world. All the past evil has revealed itself in its true magnitude. It is the duty of just rulers to preserve the peace of the world by banishing from it this cruel tiger preying upon journals and printing presses.

Choudari, Chataparru, June and July 1916.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Aug. 12th, 1916.

The Indian Consolidation Bill.

94. The Kerala Patrika, of the 12th August, rejoices at the announcement of the Secretary of State that the section relating to the abolition of the right of the people to sue him has been removed from the Indian Consolidation Bill, showing thereby that the Government have not disregarded public opinion in the matter, takes exception, however, to the appointment of Native Rulers and Chiefs, who can easily maintain themselves without entering Government service, to high posts therein, when a sufficient number of qualified men are available, and says:—In our opinion it is those nobles who seek appointments, and not the Government, that are to blame in this matter. The Government perhaps think that the selection of persons of high birth and respectability for posts under them will, even when they are not sufficiently well educated and capable, conduce to a proper administration of the country, but we do not think that this object will be attained in all cases.

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

MYSORE STAR, Mysore, Aug. 13th, 1916.

The cry of the Mysore printers.

95. In an article under this heading, the Mysore Star, of the 13th August, complains about the proposal of the Mysore Educational Department to entrust the printing of text books, etc., to a newly organised firm known as the Bangalore Printing and Publishing Company. The paper says that, although it is gratifying to see that this printing work which was hitherto entrusted to English firms will in future be executed in the province itself, it is unfortunate that what would have been a source of immense relief to the many existing presses in the state which do very satisfactory work at a much cheaper rate and which are in dire need of encouragement should have been given away to this newly organised concern, in total disregard of the tenders and protests of long established firms. Can it be, the paper asks, that the partiality to this new-hatched concern is due to the fact that there are among its promoters some sycophants of whom the Government are enamoured, or, is there any truth in the popular conjecture that some of the officers of Government who are about to retire having secretly arranged to join the enterprise on their retirement are now eager to ensure its success when they are still able to wield some power? The paper hopes that the Diwan with his characteristic highmindedness, will view the question from an unbiassed attitude and order that at least a substantial portion of the work may be set apart for the benefit of existing concerns, giving the remainder, if necessary, to the new firm.

BHARATHI, Bellary, Aug. 11th, 1916.

The encouragement of industries under the Mysore Government.

96. In a leading article under this heading the Bharathi, of the 11th August, writes:—Although it is well-known that it was only because India was backward in her industries, it was possible for outsiders to display their superiority among us, it is unfortunate that even the stirring speeches of patriotic leaders have no effect on the attitude of our brethren. They show no eagerness to enquire into the state of our industries; nor have we the necessary encouragement from the Government; nor experts with up to date knowledge gained in foreign countries. Our people would not give up their aversion to foreign travel. Even the few industries that are still in our hands might soon pass into other hands and we shall have to be content with being mere middlemen. What is it that we lack in raw materials? We have abundance of cotton and yet all our clothing comes from foreign countries. We have any quantity of iron and coal and yet the iron rails for our railways are imported. Oil seeds we have in abundance and yet we import oil. We have huge bamboo forests but our paper we get from abroad. We have abundant wood for the match industry, yet matches have to be imported. We have any quantity of raw wool, yet our shawls are got from foreign countries. We have abundance of hides, horns and bones; yet our shoes, combs, buttons, etc., have to be got from distant foreign countries. Thus our food, our clothing, bedding, footwear, headwear and almost all the articles we need for our daily life have to be got from others. Our traders never seem to have considered how long we should remain in such abject dependence on others. As Sir Thomas Holland remarked the other day, we should be able to utilise all our raw material ourselves. We first need experts. Our people have neither the enterprise nor the encouragement to go to foreign countries for industrial education. We must deem it highly laudable that the Mysore Government however have been encouraging the people to develop their industries in every possible direction. They have granted several scholarships for studying in foreign countries. Sirdar Kantharaj Urs has already left for Japan and seven other youths will shortly be sent to Japan. Have the Madras Government given any such help to its people? No! Would it not have been far more profitable if some Indians were deputed to Russia in place of Mr. Chadwick? We do not know when that time may come.

Joint Stock Companies in Mysore.

97. Commenting on the annual report on the working of the Joint Stock Companies in the Mysore Province, the Vrittanta Patrike, of the 17th August, says:—

Vrittanta Patrike, Mysore, Aug. 17th, 1916.

Readers of the report are not likely to find in it much matter for rejoicing in regard to the economic condition of the Province. It is surprising that a Government which is showing such unbounded interest in the industrial development of the State should have confined their comments on the report to the single word "Recorded". The report clearly indicates the true state of our industries and how far they are likely to progress. Four companies were registered during the year. Their nominal capital is Rs. 3,90,000. But the amount paid up is only Rs. 9,326. Six companies stopped transactions and one went into liquidation. The losses sustained by these companies during the year amounted to Rs. 1,57,200. This can hardly be said to augur well for the future. The report gives no information as to which of the companies in existence have an income which will at least cover their expenditure. We would suggest that in future years at least the report may indicate the dividends paid by the several companies. Some of them have not submitted their annual statement showing their assets and liabilities. Although the Government have enacted rules on this subject, they do not care to enforce them. Once the company is registered, the Government ought to ensure that it conforms to the rules governing such companies. But they hardly seem to evince any interest in their affairs. They are always fond of new projects. The projects must be such that the people must always keep talking about them. The press must be loud in its praise. Instead of requiring the Registrar to enforce the rules regarding the registration of companies, they have contented themselves with merely "recording" the report. This affords one more illustration of the grave defects of the present methods of our Government. It does not show the necessary firmness and discipline in regard to its existing departments but is always bent on novelties with which to surprise the world. If the efforts of Government in regard to industrial progress have borne any fruit at all, the fact should have been evident from the report on the joint stock companies. Judging from the present report it becomes abundantly clear that the economic conference is a useless organisation.

CHAKRAVARTI, Cochin, Aug. 12th 1916.

Diwan Mr. Bhore.

98. In a long leader under the heading "Diwan Mr. Bhore", the Chakravarti, of the 12th August, points out that, though Mr. Bhore has in a way maintained the financial equilibrium of the state, and has tried to solve the tramway problem, besides appointing committees, to consider and take measures for the reorganisation of the town councils, the improvement of agriculture and the affording of greater facilities of communication—measures that testify to his statesmanship—his administration is regarded by the people as a failure, because he has failed, above all, to associate freely with the people and give them a training in the art of self-government, for which in a small state like Cochin there are several opportunities, and because he did nothing to help the growth of public opinion, which began to sprout towards the end of Mr. Banerji's regime, and to lesson the burden of taxation which he thrust on the people.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

1. New India, of the 23rd August, writes:—"Professor Masaryk is one of the foremost interpreters of the aspirations of the small nations, and it is said that he 'has a better right to expound the political and historical significance of the principle of nationality at issue in the war than any other man in the world'. A special commissioner of the Christian Commonwealth interviewed him during mail week, and among other interesting things we find his closing remark which is worth quoting:

The future invasion of England.

New India, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1916.

> If Austria-Hungary remains what it is—the tool of Prussian Pan-Germanism—the position of Russia in Asia is more than threatened; the first German invasion of England will be from Asia. . . . .

"Here is one more reason why Great Britain should strengthen her position in Asia. Her Asiatic Allies of to-day may be in the opposite camp then, as France was or Germany is. If she is wise, as a matter of self-defence, Great Britain will produce a fine army of Indian Volunteers, of a size which it is not possible for her to raise anywhere else in the wide world."

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

2. The West Coast Spectator, of the 17th August, states:—"The local Superintendent of Police would do well to look occasionally into the cases charged by the Town Police before the Bench of Magistrates. Sometime ago we reported a case in which the accused cartwallas were acquitted on the ground the case was false and the charge unnecessary. A few days ago we reported another in which also there was an acquittal. If the Superintendent cares to enquire he will find that the majority of cases defended by vakil are either thrown out as false or for want of evidence.

The Calicut Town Police.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 17th, 1916.

"We understand that in one of the cases, the aggrieved is applying for sanction to prosecute the policeman responsible for the charge. Such cases are not certainly calculated to create a better understanding between the police and the people, the absence of which is made the subject-matter of occasional sermons by high officers of the Government. When such cases of zulum occur, and when policemen deliberately cook up false evidence, persuade people to perjure and charge people unnecessarily they cannot expect the public to co-operate with them. One murrained sheep spoils the whole flock, and the vagaries of individual policemen tar the fair name of the whole force."

3. New India, of the 22nd August, observes:—"A petty campaign is being carried on against New India; a few heads of colleges, hoping to curry favour with Government, shut it out of their reading rooms. That is unimportant. More serious is the order issued to the police that all persons who take the paper should be watched. All the decent people will soon be under police supervision, and it will become an indignity not to be followed by the Criminal Investigation Department."

4. In commenting on the administration report of the Bengal Police for the year 1915, New India, of the 24th August, writes:—"The official statement that the astounding increase in burglary and theft is due to economic distress is highly significant. If a partial failure of the crops and a fall in the price of jute are to increase cases of theft and burglary by about 25 per cent, what are we to think of the economic condition of Bengal? Is it not proof positive that the cup of economic distress in that unhappy province is full to the brim? And what have the Government done to relieve the situation? Nothing that we are aware of. . . . . What is of more importance is to know how the Government of Bengal propose to remedy the dangerous situation. It is certainly folly of the most ridiculous type to set natural causes at work to increase crime, and then to abuse the people or to increase the powers of the police. The Government of Bengal has refused to recognise that absurdity in the matter of political crime. Will they recognise it in at least the other sphere? Will they now turn their attention to the root-causes of the growing danger? To permit economic distress to increase is most dangerous in any country, specially so in Bengal, where anarchist influences are still at work."

The writ of mandamus against the Madras University.

5. Referring to the case of Messrs. G. A. Natesan and Ramanatha Ayyar v. the University of Madras, the West Coast Reformer, of the 18th August, states:—The judgment is a triumph of vakildom over what may be called the 'executive spirit' or the autocratic tendency of the Syndicate. That the High Court had to command the idols of the temple of learning to do a simple duty, as clearly defined by the regulations, is a severe condemnation of the spirit pervading the educational legacy of Lord Curzon."

The Tilak case.

6. In commenting on the case in which Bal Gangadhar Tilak was bound over to be of good behaviour for a year, the Mysore Patriot, of the 22nd August, writes:—"It is an irony of fate that a gentleman, so sincerely attached to the British Government should have been so unfortunate. India can be a jewel in the British Crown, only if the constitutional traditions of England can be made to become the heritage of India. If this is denied, no far-sighted man can say that the foundations of the British Empire in India are on solid ground. . . . . Lord Morley once said that in order to make a Parliamentary Government, England made uncommon sacrifices and India cannot expect constitutional Government unless it is prepared to make such sacrifices. If that is the condition of self-government in India, let Mr. Tilak be sacrificed. Let him become the Simon-de-Montfort of India. If necessary, let all those who work silently for Home Rule be also sacrificed at the altar of self-government. We agree with Lord Morley. There can be no gain without a corresponding pain and India must be ready to pay the price of Home Rule."

(d) Education.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 17th, 1916.

National education.

7. In commenting on Viscount Haldane's speech in the House of Lords on national education, the West Coast Spectator, of the 17th August, observes:—"Education imparted in Japanese schools and colleges is so perfect that even the sons of peers and nobles have exchanged the sword for the ploughshare, so to speak. The desire for education of the type that fits the recipient for the battle of life is created in the lowest class. How different is it from the education imparted in our country. No attempt is made to create a love of the country in the pupil. He is taught the glories of another nation, he is taught that his country has hopelessly fallen down, he is taught Geometry and Algebra, Shakespeare and Milton, the causes of the American Civil War and the adventures of Cortes in Mexico. He crams into his head so many things, all absolutely useless, and he goes out of college to join the bar and to swell the ranks of the invertebrates who are living protests against India, her traditions and life. . . . . It is no wonder that hundreds of thousands of our young men waste their career without being of any use to their country, and live in discontent and sadness. We are almost inclined to think that our universities in their present constitution are not only useless to the land, but constitute a danger in that they turn out people who prove a burden afterwards. The State is no doubt spending colossal sums on education, but this should be regarded as mere waste so long as it does not bring any resultant advantage to the country. All are agreed that the time has come for a radical change in the system of education. With the example of Japan and Germany before our eyes, we can do no better than make an emphatic demand for the introduction of those methods which have been found so very eminently successful elsewhere."

8. United India and Native States, for the week ending 17th August, writes:—"The present-day Indian students seem to be getting out of hand. Quite recently there was the Presidency College trouble at Calcutta. This was followed by more or less serious disturbances in the Wesley College, Royapettah, and the Pittapuram Raja's College at Cocanada due to causes into which we need not enter here. Now comes the news that the Hindu students of the Civil Engineering College at Sibpur have gone on strike. . . . . The frequent manifestations of lawlessness on the part of the Indian students fill us with grave misgivings as to the future of the country. . . . . It will be an evil day if the old spirit of reverence for the teacher were to disappear and its place taken by lawless propensities manifesting themselves in acts like the assaults on Professors Oaten and Surendranath Das. These disgraceful attacks on teachers should be made impossible of occurrence if the rising generation is to progress on right lines"

UNITED INDIA AND NATIVE STATES, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1916.

Indian students' troubles.

9. New India, of the 23rd August, writes:—"Now that the younger Indian members of the Senate are becoming more active, outspoken and persistent in their service of the University, and their power is beginning to be felt for good, there is some prospect of the University's coming to perceive what it exists for, and on whom it should bestow its degrees and distinctions. Up to the present it has not attained sufficient self-consciousness to realise that it has a definite purpose in the uplifting of the Indian nation. . . . . At present there is too much drudgery in the Madras course—too much eye-work and brain-destruction. The average History student is so full of anxiety to remember all that he can about the origin, development and decline of Henry VIII's wives, that he cannot possibly think, except in a few set phrases and modes, about the human complications and political consequences of the monarch's folly. He is too busy scratching for worms on the dung-heap of History to realise its value as fertilising manure, and to learn to apply it to the improvement of the conditions of life around him in his own times. There should be a general slackening of this drudgery, and more development of mental power; for ability to do things with the brain is the chief attainment of mental education.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1916.

The Pass degree of the Madras University.

"In a large Presidency like Madras, the test of fitness for a degree must be a relative one, not an arbitrament of foreign-minded examiners. The standard of marks should first of all be based on average results. . . . . Government is careful to distinguish between the schools for Indians and those for so-called Europeans, so they can scarcely object to our University's becoming more Indian in character than it is at present. While respecting the rights and even the conveniences of even foreign minorities, one cannot but feel that when the University aims at serving India more it will be truer to its progenitors and to its salt than it now is; and it lies chiefly with the Indian workers in the field to say in what way that service can best be correlated with the requirements of Indian culture, and of Indian social, political, industrial and professional life."

10. New India, of the 23rd August, remarks:—"We learn that a feeling of grave displeasure has arisen among the Trustees of the Central Hindu College. As Sir Harcourt Butler refused to consider the question of the Hindu University unless a nucleus was provided of an already successful college, the trustees agreed to hand over their much loved institution, making the condition that they should still have a share in its future by electing ten of their number as life-members of the court. This was agreed to, they elected ten trustees as originally life-members, Mrs. Annie Besant being accepted in addition on account of her great services to the college. . . . . Now we hear that they are elected for five years only, not for life, so that five years hence they may all disappear, while the University holds on to their property. This is a serious scandal, and the least that can be done is for the Hon'ble Pandit M. M. Malaviya to introduce an amending Bill into the Supreme Legislative Council, nominating the eleven persons concerned as life-members of the court. If the matter be allowed to drift, the breach of faith will be condoned, and the wrong perpetuated. Sir Harcourt Butler's honour, as a public man, is involved in this matter."

11. In concluding a leader on this subject, the Hindu, of the 21st August, says:—We feel that if the recommendations of the Pilgrim Committee in regard to the various places of pilgrimage visited by them are to be speedily carried out, the financial side of the question will have to be satisfactorily solved by the Government as early as possible. It has been the fate of many committees to see their recommendations wrecked on the bedrock of finance, and we shall not be surprised if ten years hence nothing had been done in regard to the recommendations of the Pilgrim Committee and if its report is regarded by some future Finance Member as a chimerical and unpractical production. But if the true interests of the people of this Presidency are consulted, we feel no doubt that better sanitation and purer water-supplies at places where hundreds of thousands assemble annually is one of the urgent problems of practical administration in this Presidency."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1916.

The Coimbatore Municipality.

12. In commenting on the orders of Government on the Administration Report of the Coimbatore Municipality, regarding the remission of school fees in municipal schools, New India, of the 22nd August, remarks:—"This is red tape in its worst and most absurd form. What was the reason that influenced the Government of India not to make education free? Certainly the question of funds. That being so, why should the assistance of that declaration be called in where the supply of funds is not inadequate? In effect, the Government policy is as follows: 'You should not make elementary instruction free because there may not be necessary funds. And if you have the funds, you must not make it free, because we have already decided it shall not be free.' We hope the Government of Madras will perceive the staring absurdity of their decision."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1916.

The Madras City Municipal Bill.

13. Referring to the resolution discussed at the recent meeting of the Madras Corporation on the action taken by the Government of Madras, with regard to this Bill, New India, of the 23rd August, writes:—"With a semi-official majority in the Legislative Council, and with a local Government that sincerely believes in the uselessness of non-official assistance to the Sanitary Board, or in the absence of even half-a-dozen Indians capable of worthily filling the office of District Board Presidents, the chances of improving the defects in any Bill once approved by the Supreme Government are almost nil. No effective amendments are likely to be accepted, and even if the Madras City Municipal Bill should aim at creating a muddle, such as we now have in the matter of village panchayats, the chances are that it will be en bloc placed on the Statute Book. It is for the Government of India to consider whether such a state of affairs should be continued, even after the advertised change in the angle of vision."

South Indian Railway grievances.

14. The following appears in the Hindu of the 23rd August:—"We have received a number of letters setting forth various grievances of the travelling public and the subordinate Indian staff on the South Indian Railway. We have forwarded these letters to the Railway authorities for their consideration, and we are glad to state that for the most part the replies have been satisfactory. An exception is to be found in the case of Railway retiring rooms, about which a correspondent complained that Indians were excluded from retiring rooms at junction stations, the Railway authorities holding that such rooms have been designed for and are constituted according to the requirements of Europeans. The racial distinction is invidious and it is extremely desirable that a distinction like this, provocative of much ill-feeling, should be done away with, and that the test of eligibility to use the rooms in question should be based upon respectability rather than race."

Railway accommodation for pilgrims.

15. New India, of the 23rd August, writes:—"The most fascinating part of the report of the Pilgrims' Committee deals with railway accommodation for pilgrims, but the full significance of their observations will not be realised until the personnel of the committee is carefully scrutinised. Including the President, there were six members, three of whom were Government officers, and one a non-official—the Hon'ble Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao. The other two were railway officials: Dr. Hayes, the Chief Medical Officer of the South Indian Railway, and Dr. Jackson, District Medical Officer of the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway. The position of these last two was indeed most delicate in the committee. They were in some respects personally responsible for the comforts and the safety of pilgrim passengers, and an adverse report would therefore not only displease their superiors, but also amount to an admission that they themselves had been negligent in their duties as railway officials. If we bear this delicate position of theirs in mind, their observations on the subject become fully understandable. . . . . In the light of all these facts, it is no wonder that Mr. Ramachandra Rao dissents from the conclusion of the committee that the 'very considerable overcrowding'—the existence of which they all testify to—'does not amount to a scandal.'"

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1916.

In a leader on this subject, the Hindu, of the 25th August, observes:—"We referred briefly on Tuesday last to the perennial subject of the grievances of the travelling public on the South Indian Railway, and expressed the hope that the railway administration will do something to remove these long standing complaints. Many of these have been made for several years by the travelling public in Southern India, but the railway authorities have always maintained an attitude of indifference to these grievances and have also now and then defended themselves on the ground that the complaints are either exaggerated or unfounded. . . . . The South Indian Railway is now a State line and under the agreement for the working of this line 13·14ths of the net profits are appropriated by the Government. The Government cannot, therefore, take up the position that the Railway Company is solely responsible for the removal of the existing complaints. We trust that this view of the matter would be seriously considered by the authorities and that necessary action would be taken in the near future. . . . . On the subject of the Indian refreshment rooms there has been a considerable body of opinion that the railway authorities have not even attempted to approach the question in a sympathetic spirit. We admit that the problem offers many difficulties for solution, and the report of the majority of the Pilgrims Committee shows a disposition to exaggerate these difficulties of the railway authorities as much as possible in regard to the present disgraceful state of things."

The Indian Civil Service.

16. The West Coast Spectator, of the 17th August, has the following:—"The 'most distinguished service' will not thank Mr. Bernard Houghton, retired Indian Civil Servant, for his views on their work and attitude towards India. Mr. Houghton thinks that the discontent in India is indirectly due to the Civil Service, members of which are always in opposition to the demands and views of the people. It is fortunate that Mr. Houghton writes this from England. Had he been in India, he would have lost caste."

Nayar recruits for the army.

17. The West Coast Spectator, of the 17th August, writes:—"In our district (Malabar) the Nayar young men of good birth have not at all come forward to enlist, and it was, perhaps, with a view to stimulate the dormant martial spirit that Mr. Evans addressed the students of the Zamorin's College the other day. . . . . Our educated young men hanker after commissions and reject with disdain offers of enlistment as privates. We are not prepared to support the views of these young men in their entirety, but they do not deserve to be condemned outright for this attitude. Taking the case of Malayalees of respectable birth and parentage, they are naturally proud, proud of their birth and social position, and, therefore, loth to rub shoulders with the ordinary private, enlisted from the farm and the field. The objection is, no doubt, sentimental, but prejudices and sentiments die hard, and they have to be respected. Further, there is the belief that in the matter of pay and allowances, invidious distinctions are made. In French India, the new recruits are on a footing with the French soldier in regard to salary and allowances. In our own country, the Eurasians are statutory natives of India. They are given the pay and prospects of the European soldier, and we cannot understand on what principle of fairness and justice they are allowed a privilege denied to the native Indian subjects of His Majesty. . . . . In these invidious distinctions, perhaps, we have the secret of the feeble response to the call for enlistment. . . . . It is not possible to give all commissions, but we would suggest that Nayar—and for the matter of that Indian—sepoys recruited for service during the war, should be placed on the same footing as Eurasians. In the case of the Nayar Company that is being raised respectable, educated young men should be given commissions. . . . . We have said enough to clear the points under doubt, and we have to express the hope that the Government will sympathetically consider the issues we have ventured to raise."

Anglo-Indians and Lord Hardinge.

18. The following appears in New India of the 19th August:—"It is well known that the Anglo-Indians detest Lord Hardinge because of his outspoken sympathy with Indian aspirations; his final crime was telling the members of the Indian Civil Service that their highest duty was the divesting themselves of power and its transference to Indians. This unscrupulous party is exploiting the sufferings of the troops in Mesopotamia in order to discredit Indian administration. Our cuttings this week include three leading articles from the Times, attacking the Government of India, stating that the Indian military system has broken down under the test of war, and making various assertions concerning the conduct of affairs which, to speak plainly, are untrue. The effort is made to throw blame on Lord Minto and Lord Hardinge, and to discredit the military authorities here and Sir William Meyer. It is wonderful how the enemies of the British Government are fastening on Mesopotamia, as a convenient stick with which to beat the Government."

New India, Madras, Aug. 19th, 1916.

The European Association.

19. Referring to the European Association's appeal for members, New India, of the 19th August, observes:—"The efforts of the European Association may be patriotic, but what is non-understandable is the assurance that it does not 'agitate or harass the Government'. The past history of the Association belies that assertion, and what is most funny, it is now engaged in an agitation for a separate European representative in the Supreme Council, as distinguished from that of Chambers of Commerce and Trades Associations. For the past three years the authorities of the European association have been repeatedly pressing that demand on the notice of the Government of India, and in their latest, they urge that the time has come for the fulfilment of the pledge of the Government, to the effect that their claim would be considered at the time of modifying the constitution of the Supreme Council. . . . . If this is not agitation, what can it be? . . . . The object of the association in demanding an additional representative may, in the opinion of its own members, be 'in every sense patriotic,' but we do not think the Government of India would be rightly advised to grant it. The European element in the Supreme Council is already very strong, and to increase it while keeping down the number of the representatives of the people, would create the severest disappointment in the country. . . . . If, simply because four thousand non-Indians have asked for a great privilege, that should be conceded, the position of the children of the soil becomes indeed precarious. And except that one claim, we do not perceive another, requiring a separate representative for the Europeans. Will they never cease to be aliens, nor merge their 'interests' in those of the whole?"

The Anantapur District Conference.

20. Referring to the presidential address delivered by the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao, at the recent session of this Conference, New India, of the 19th August, says:—"At the very outset of his address the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao naturally referred to self-government for India and Home Rulers will rejoice to read his clear pronouncement. . . . . The Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao speaks a straight word against recent repression by the Government of Madras and Bombay in the cases of Mrs. Besant and Mr. Tilak, and we must record with gratitude his frank statement that 'I have not been able to find anything disloyal or seditious in her (Mrs. Besant's) speeches or writings.' . . . . . We congratulate the Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao on his frank and open address and quite agree with him in his closing remarks. . . . . In the coming days, great and splendid opportunities will be presented to our leaders, and a united band of them will be able to achieve wonders, if the older amongst them become a little more enthusiastic, and the youngers a little more considerate, and if all will take to heart the lesson that self-forgetfulness is the highest dharma of all leaders. On the basis of self-sacrifice, steady and persistent work, but above all fearless redress of all wrongs and injustices, should our leaders proceed to gain freedom for the motherland."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 19th, 1916.

The Government of Bombay and Mrs. Besant.

21. Referring to the question asked by Mr. Phillip Snowden, M.P., in the House of Commons, as to what reasons were given by the Government of India for the prohibition of Mrs. Besant from entering the Bombay Presidency, New India, of the 19th August, writes:—"We owe the following to the able correspondent in London of the Hindu, from which we take it with thanks. The Censor may have confiscated Mr. Snowden's letter to New India, for it is due and has not reached us. Reuter, of course, builds a wall of silence between Great Britain and India, and allows only such news to pass as suits the India Council in London and the Indian Civil Service here. . . . . We are grateful to Mr. Snowden, M.P., for drawing the attention of Parliament to this incident, but it is only one of many. Mr. Snowden is quite right in saying that the spread of revolutionary methods is 'owing to the conduct of the Government of India' and its agents. Mrs. Besant travelled all the way to Dacca to speak against revolutionary methods and to urge the youth of East Bengal to follow constitutional ways. The Censor suppressed this part of her lecture. The phenomenal ignorance of Mr. Austen Chamberlain regarding India can cause no surprise. The silencing of Mr. Tilak is another case in which the Government stops constitutional agitation, or rather, drives it underground. The Bombay Government is leading Mr. Chamberlain into the old, old, blunder, of regarding agitation as the work of a handful of persons, instead of realising that those persons are merely expressing the people's thoughts. They cannot silence a nation, and as they silence one 'agitator' after another, more and more will come forward to take their place."

The Anglo-Indian press and Home Rule for India.

22. The West Coast Spectator, of the 19th August, states:—"The Anglo-Indian papers are violently attacking the idea of Home Rule, and Mrs. Besant is equally energetic in replying to them in the columns of her paper. Why spend so much powder and shot over the meaningless gibberish and silly flapdoodle Hare Street and First Line Beach are ejecting? We would rather treat such effusions with contempt, instead of tiring the patience of the reader with eternal quotations and arguments. India is not going to give up the idea of Home Rule because a handful of Anglo-Indian extremists say it is bad for us. Repressive measures in Madras.

23. The Hindu, of the 19th August, writes:—"We have heard nothing more of the contemplated extension of the powers under the Defence of India Act to this Presidency, but rumours are rife that repressive action of some sort is impending with a view to punish or to prevent the dissemination of alleged seditious matter in Madras. Public opinion has sufficiently emphasised the fact that the recent action of the Madras Government in putting in force the provisions of the Indian Press Act was the reverse of judicious, and had the opposite effect to what was intended by it. The public sensation aroused by it has to a great extent subsided, and calm and quietness have given place to excitement in the public mind. It seems to us difficult to believe that the Local Government could now be on the quest to create fresh cause for agitation and embittered controversy. We hope that calm counsels will prevail and a prudent and far-seeing policy will guide the action of the Local Government."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Aug. 22nd, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the West Coast Spectator, of the 22nd August says:—"Rumours are again rife that the Defence of India Act will shortly be extended in its entirety to this Presidency. Such an action will be both unwarranted and unjust. Let us hope that the Indian member in the Executive Council will persuade the Government not to take an exaggerated view of the present situation. Because one or two individuals have given free play to their tongue and pen, it is no reason why the whole Presidency should be brought under a cloud."

HINDU, Madras, Aug. 21st, 1916.

The Secretary of State and New India.

24. The Hindu, of the 21st August, remarks:—"Mr. Chamberlain, the Secretary of State for India, is reported by Reuter to have stated, in reply to a question in the House of Commons, that he was not prepared to interfere with the action of the Government of Madras regarding the taking of security from New India. He was not aware that every Indian paper of standing had protested or that the action had created indignation throughout India. If he was not aware of these points, his ignorance can only be described as 'abysmal,' and if his comprehension of the opinions and sentiments of the Indian public on the matter, which is one of public notoriety in this country, is of such a negative character, his grasp of Indian questions cannot, it need hardly be pointed out, be very profound. Men of all shades of opinion have expressed their indignation at the oppressive operation of the Press Act in unqualified terms by means of writings in the press and well-attended public meetings. If, even as a matter of information, the Secretary of State for India is unaware of the fact, what chance is there of redress to the Indian people in the pursuit of even the most constitutional methods of ventilating their wrongs? The District Magistrate of Poona complains in his judgment that Mr. Tilak in one of his speeches on Home Rule likened the Secretary of State for India to 'a son-in-law' and remarked that he was not wanted. But unless criticism is to be absolutely stifled, it is open to the people of India to inquire and if need be to point out in what negligent manner the servants of the Crown charged with the administration of India are performing their duties, and to urge that costly and superflous offices should be abolished."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1916.

Writing under the heading "Know-nothing Chamberlain," New India, of the 22nd August, says:—"Mr. Chamberlain has pleaded his ignorance several times regarding Indian affairs, and he had the same excuse to put forward in answering Mr. Snowden, M.P. As our readers are aware, the Secretary of State is practising economy by not subscribing to this paper, and apparently all Indian papers have been cut off, for they all contained columns on their local meetings, and reports of interviews with their leading politicians.

He must have narrowed down his list of newspaper to the Englishman, the Pioneer and the Madras Mail. Thus he has become, in a short time, the most ill-informed Secretary with which this country has ever been—blessed. Such voluntary and deliberate ignorance of the feelings of the people over whom he is Chief Autocrat is criminal. He ought to know what is going on, even if he is reckless enough to disregard it His duty to his Sovereign, who has entrusted him with this mighty charge of the Indian Empire, demands at least that he should know the trend of public opinion. If Mr. Chamberlain has not heard of this agitation he must naturally be deaf to everything else the Indian press or public is saying or doing, and one may well ask: 'What shall be done to our Secretary of State?' The Bombay Chronicle once suggested that a propaganda should be set on foot with the cry: 'Chamberlain must go.' C.M.G. It seems to us that it is high time something of the kind should be done. To put up with an unsympathetic Secretary is bad enough, but to put up with a know-nothing one is dangerous. Nero fiddles while Rome is burning."

25. The Indian Patriot, of the 21st August, writes:—"Miss Elizabeth Severs, who was an active follower of Mrs. Besant in Madras, in the days of the sensational trial in the High Court, has sent us a pamphlet, written and published by herself. Her theme is theosophy and politics, and her object is to show that it is not to the interests of the Theosophical Society that Mrs. Besant, its president, should devote practically nearly her whole time to the political campaign with which she is identified at present. . . . . We are only concerned with the effect of Mrs. Besant's position in the politics of India. Many even of those who enthusiastically welcomed her into our public life have begun to entertain serious apprehensions as to the beneficial results of her association with the political development of the country. . . . . Two years ago Mrs. Besant was nobody in Indian politics. After she has entered upon Indian politics, she has proved a forceful personality dragging a large number of people with her wherever she goes. What is this force which has enabled her to carry them with her? It is not merely her influence as a politician, but her power as the President of the Theosophical Society. The position she occupies in the society is so respected by Theosophists that very few of them have any judgment or opinion independent of the judgment or opinion of Mrs. Besant. . . . . We have witnessed a remarkable intellectual prostration before Mrs. Besant, of men to whom the world gave credit for qualities which they have ceased to exhibit. She has been gaining influence and mastery over the minds of men. . . . . It is true that the Government is too strong for Mrs. Besant, but Mrs. Besant knows how to improve an opportunity. So far she has managed to enlist the general sympathy of the educated classes; but it must also be noted that through this sympathy she has captured their minds as well. There are signs that the conquest is not so absolute as she would wish, and in all probability the beginning is already seen of the relaxation of her hold on educated India."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Aug. 21st, 1916.

26. In concluding an article on this subject, the Hindu, of the 22nd August, observes:—"We have received complaints of fraudulent misappropriation of public money received at war concerts and entertainments by persons who make a living by their promotion. Whether these complaints be well founded or not they are a fit subject for enquiry, and we should suggest that Government might devote some attention to the matter in view of the facts that such swindles or the mere suspicion of the bonâ fides of such efforts gravely prejudice the success of the genuine funds with some of which Government is associated, besides providing an easy opportunity for rascality to flourish with a minimum expenditure of trouble or risk. The scandal is a sufficiently serious one in England, but in India where the ignorant are much more easily imposed upon and where their means of redress are much less handy, the position clearly calls for early action. Cannot the Local Governments in India take action on the lines suggested by the Home Office Committee in England?"

The Public Services Commission.

27. Referring to the decision of the Government to publish the report of the Public Services Commission, the Indian Patriot, of the 22nd August, writes:—"We are glad of this decision, and so far as the publication of the report is intended to secure consideration of the claims of Indians for increased employment of Indians, it is a matter for sincere satisfaction. It points to a conviction on the part of the Government that the delay in dealing with the question is inexpedient. The opinion in India is that the claims have been long overdue, and that further postponement of them would naturally dissatisfy Indian opinion."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1916.

Indian labour in Ceylon.

28. The Indian Patriot, of the 22nd August, states:—"The voice of warning comes from Ceylon that the lot of the Indian coolies there is no way better than the lot of their unfortunate brethren in Singapore or Canada. It also affords us the proof that we need not seek for misery in indenture; but free emigration of ignorant and helpless people means as much oppression as indenture. . . . . It is true that the Indian cooly who comes to Ceylon is not indentured in theory, but in practice he is as bad as any of his brethren who leave their birth place and home to distant parts of the empire in quest of pastures new, under the indentured system. The troubles he undergoes and the ill-treatment he receives at the hands of those who are appointed to overseer the transfer of his body and soul to Ceylon is a doleful tale and we shall not repeat it here."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1916.

"Repression."

29. The following is the leader in New India of the 22nd August:—"The air is thick with rumours of increased repression, to follow on the publication of the Report of the Public Services Commission. It is said that the concessions made in it are very meagre and unsatisfactory, but that they are all that India will obtain, and that, if thought necessary new powers will be asked for to control if not to stop, political discussion. Lord Willingdon has loudly proclaimed his disapproval of political discussion, and he has silenced Mr. Tilak in a way of which the less said the better, if we are to avoid the pitfalls of the Penal Code. His Excellency the Viceroy is said to agree with Lord Willingdon; he wishes us to take up economic and industrial problems, forgetful of the fact that, until India manages her own fiscal affairs, she cannot deal efficiently with economic problems, since she is handicapped by the Government's tenderness for 'British interests,' and she cannot deal with industrial questions, since the weight of British Chambers of Commerce is used to increase the export of raw materials and the import of articles manufactured from them abroad. If you place at the loom a workman with handcuffs to compete with another whose hands are free, the first will have little chance of success, and India, with all her revenues managed by non-Indians, her taxation and her expenditure alike controlled by foreigners, what chance has she against Great Britain, free and strong, with her control not only of British finances but also of those of India? To forbid India to discuss Home Rule would be to strangle not only her political, but also her economic and industrial life. It would mean her death as a nation, after an agonising decay.

"But, frankly, repression is useless. It comes too late. For the last ten years, at least, a stream of high-spirited patriotic youths has been pouring out of the Universities, and these, led by a few earnest and devoted men of the decade before them, cannot be intimidated into silence. We grant the weakness of the elder ranks of our leaders, of the men who worked so nobly in the early Congress days, were then 'seditious,' 'firebrands,' 'disloyal'. They have made the present movement possible; but they resent its courage and its energy, its independence of Government favour, its determination to win, not additional seats, but India's freedom. And they resent not unnaturally, Mrs. Annie Besant's popularity, and are by no means inclined to defy the Government in her defence.

"But the Government has not to deal with the gradually weakening circle of veterans, resting on their oars, but with the forward-springing youthful manhood of India, led by men in manhood's vigorous prime, and with behind them the school and college recruits, the reserves of the national army. How does it propose to deal with them? A Government is weaker than a nation. It may imprison, it may even slay, but such repression sows the dragon's teeth in India's furrows, ploughed by the bulls of Mahadeva. Let us see. Lokamanya Tilak is for the moment silenced. And the result? The coming forward of a group of stalwarts to preach Home Rule throughout Maharashtra. For one silenced, twelve speak. The Government deals with Mrs. Annie Besant on the lines indicated by the Madras Mail? In Madras, in the United Provinces, in Bengal, the voices preaching Home Rule will be heard. A Government can only succeed in repression where it is faced by cowards. A hundred brave men make repression impossible, for Englishmen cannot go to Russian lengths. At the present moment, young men in the Presidencies of Bombay, Madras and Bengal, young men in the great towns of the United Provinces, are organising themselves and are appealing to Mrs. Annie Besant to be their leader. At present she has answered nothing, beyond the refusal to make any struggle for the Congress chair, which belongs of right to the Hon'ble Mr. Ambikacharan Mozumdar. But she knows that, if she should be repressed, hundreds are ready to carry on the propaganda of Home Rule. Government cannot succeed in a campaign of repression. It is too late. It is useless for it to depend on the old men. It is young India with whom they have to deal."

Charitable endowments.

30. In commenting on the orders of Government on the report of the Board of Revenue on charitable endowments, New India, of the 22nd August, observes:—

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1916.

"The Government of Madras are determined to do the little they can towards remedying a crying need of the Province; but the relief that will be given will be, at its best, very little. Religious endowments will be excluded from this chastening influence, and as to the charitable endowments themselves, the powers of the local agents are meagre in practice, specially so where the property concerned happens to be very valuable. The present decision of the Government may, however, prove useful in one way—it may demonstrate to the Government of India how urgent is the need for fresh legislation."

The rules of Provincial finance.

31. Referring to the resolution of the Government of India in the Financial Department laying down revised rules "defining the financial powers of sanction and control, which will be exercised by Local Governments under the new Provincial Settlement of 1912," the Hindu, of the 23rd August, writes:—

HINDU, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1916.

"The text of the resolution, which has been published in the Fort St. George Gazette, is one which should claim the close attention of all students both of finance and administration, and it would serve to show how, despite most elaborate rules, the tendency of bureaucratic Governments necessarily lies in the direction of centralisation. So long as there is no effective popular check upon the raising or the spending of public moneys for public purposes, the delegation of uncontrolled powers to subordinate authorities is necessarily a difficult matter, and a relaxation of superior supervision has always been found as risky as it is difficult to bring about. This was well foreseen by the Decentralisation Commission itself, and the futility of the efforts to reduce centralisation and to give greater elasticity to Provincial finance cannot be better illustrated than by this resolution. . . . . But for all the elaboration of details, we are confronted in the midst of these rules with a few broad propositions which show how illusory is the attempt to make Provincial finance self-contained in the absence of popular legislative control."

"Distinction without a difference."

32. The following appears in New India of the 23rd August:—"An ingenuous correspondent sends us a question which we are unfortunately unable to answer. He wants to know why it is right and noble for Indians to fight and to kill other people in defence of liberty in Flanders, France, Serbia, Gallipoli, Mesopotamia, Egypt, East Africa, Arabia, while it is wrong for them to agitate peacefully and constitutionally for liberty in their own country. It may be that the ecclesiastical doctrine of vicarious atonement has distorted English appreciation of justice, so that they feel that they may tyrannise here provided that they punish tyranny in Europe. Or it may be that liberty and justice are one man's meat and another man's poison, according to the longitude and latitude of his habitat. We are sorry that we cannot enlighten our correspondent. Perhaps if he sends his conundrum to the Madras Mail, the learned editor may be able to answer it.

"Some American opinions on the Indian Empire."

33. The Hindu, of the 23rd August, remarks:—"A good specimen of the kind of literature on matters relating to India with which that small section of the British public interested in the subject is usually treated, is afforded by a small pamphlet published by T. Fisher Unwin, Limited, London, entitled 'Some American opinions on the Indian Empire.' Some of the opinions clearly prove the necessity and surpreme importance (if any proof were needed) of our leaders carrying on a systematic propaganda of enlightening the British Democracy about the true state of affairs in India. . . . . Our readers will easily see how the account of these persons who are blinded by ignorance and prejudice with regard to India (however otherwise estimable and eminent they might be) is not a whit better or more accurate than the description of the elephant by four blind men in the familiar story."

The fate of Hindu pilgrims.

34. The Indian Patriot, of the 24th August, states:—"Except that some gentlemen had free travel and sight-seeing at Government expense, the result of the Pilgrims' Committee would be nothing more than its printed report unless very earnest and prompt measures are taken on their recommendations—especially on the views of the Indian Member who, on the whole, could better realise the difficulties of the pilgrims. . . . . The scenes among the Hajis at Bombay, which sometimes call for the pity of the human heart, are being faithfully copied in the Hindu pilgrim centres. . . . . The railways may say that there is no overcrowding, the religious institutions that there is no mismanagement, but the fact is there to the eternal shame of civilisation, that human beings are dealt with as cattle, and this is continuing. This must be changed, and we hope that the war will not be an excuse for postponing action when the urgency for such action has been proved beyond a doubt."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1916.

The Congress Presidentship.

35. The Indian Patriot, of the 24th August, observes:—"Mrs. Besant has addressed a letter to the Reception Committee of the Congress at Lucknow. She still thinks that she should have been elected President or the Congress, not exactly on account of her work for the Congress, which is but of two years' duration, but because she has been attacked by the Governments of Madras and Bombay. . . . . Who in India has suffered more for his convictions than Mr. Tilak? And what is the length of Mr. Tilak's service? Mr. Tilak and his followers as strenuously sought the presidency of the Congress as Mrs. Besant and her followers do now; and if it is the object of Congressmen to defy Government, it is not possible for it to defy it on stronger grounds than on behalf of Mr. Tilak. Are Mrs. Besant's services any way comparable to those of Mr. Tilak; and for what reason does Mrs. Besant think that the Congress Committees, following public opinion as shown in the press and public meetings, should have elected him. . . . . It is not to be expected, when she presents her claims for the presidency of the Congress, that Mrs. Besant will be disposed to belittle her own achievements. And her chief achievement, on the strength of which she claims the presidentship of the Congress, is that she has defied the Government. . . . . Finding that the Congress has not such appreciation of Mrs. Besant and her services, she tells old Congressmen that they are jealous of her work, and that in their desire to stand well with the Government they are prepared to sacrifice her. This is the most astounding impertinence which a candidate for the presidency of the Congress could have ever urged, and Congressmen are bound to resent it. Nor will Congressmen be better pleased with the charge of cowardice which Mrs. Besant lays at their door. Mrs. Besant will tell us that she is pursuing English methods, and that we Indians have not the courage to follow her where she may choose to lead us. We plead guilty to the charge; we admit that we have not the blood of the martyr in us. . . . . If she goes on in this way, Mrs. Besant will find before long that her position in the Congress has become impossible. . . . . If the people whom Mrs. Besant addresses accept her advice, they must make it as impossible for the Congress work to be carried on in peace as it was in 1906 and 1907; and Mrs. Besant is doing this deliberately and with the knowledge that she is preparing for a split in the Congress."

36. Referring to an article in the Manchester Guardian on the excise duty on cotton goods manufactured in India, New India, of the 24th August, says:—"Note the words: 'The Government of India's tacit agreement to bow to the home country's interest.' When we speak of the Government subordinating the interests of India to those of England we are told that we are talking 'abominable trash,' are 'seditious,' are 'stirring up bad feeling'. Here is a correspondent saying the same without turning a hair, and treating it as a matter of course."

37. Referring to the judgment of the Mysore Chief Court in an appeal against the conviction of Mr. Garuda Char, an Advocate of Shimoga, for receiving stolen property, United India and Native States, for the week ending 17th August, remarks:—"We trust that the Government of His Highness the Maharaja will institute a searching enquiry into this unfortunate affair after the remarkable exposures by the two learned Judges of the Chief Court, so that the ugly features of this deplorable transaction will be made impossible of repetition."

38. In reviewing the Cochin Financial Statement for the year 1092 M.E., the West Coast Spectator, of the 19th August, says:—"Taken all in all, we cannot help remarking that the case for retrenchment is very strong in Cochin; economy has to be enforced on the spending departments, with a general cutting down in the costs of the administration. . . . . Under education, the revised estimate for 1091 is Rs. 5·49 lakhs showing an increase of nine thousand rupees, while 1092 is expected to show an increase of nearly 21 thousand. The man in the street is apt to congratulate the Darbar on their unstinted liberality, but we have to ask whether the amount is spent usefully and with discretion. It was only the other day we noticed how reckless the department is in granting sanction to open new schools and in making grants. Red tape supervenes, and we see schools where they are not necessary, and localities going away without any facilities even though deserving them. Something is rotten in the State of Denmark, and we have already pointed out where this rottenness is. The establishment charges are exhorbitant. . . . . We have a costly staff, a Director of Public Instruction with a fat salary, a Chief Inspector with substantial emoluments and a few Deputy Inspectors. Some of these gentlemen could very well be sent about their business, and the salary of the staff substantially cut down. We are greatly amused to learn that over and above the fat pay the Director draws he is given an exchange compensation allowance also! This is adding insult to injury—to the tax-payer. . . . . The Diwan pleads for economy, and as a first step towards it he can do no better than cut down the Director's pay and emoluments without any mercy and in justice to the man who pays the piper. In these times of financial strain it is foolish to maintain any white elephants, even for show and pomposity. . . . . Another white elephant the tax-payer is compelled to maintain is the Police Department, the Superintendent of which gets nearly eight hundred rupees. A first-grade Inspector on Rs. 250 is quite sufficient for a State which is no bigger than the Ponnāni taluk. . . . . It would be some consolation were there efficiency, but we can point out murders, by the score that have gone undetected, and adduce facts and figures to show that the Cochin bobby who consumes a large deal of the tax-payers' money admits of much room for improvement. . . . . We are afraid that the 'most important financial problem' will remain unsolved so long as the Darbar go on maintaining a herd of white elephants simply for show and are not prepared to mercilessly put down expenditure especially on establishments."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

39. The Lokopakari, of the 14th August, writes:—It appears that a rule is to be enforced from the 1st September 1916 that any Indian proceeding to British East Africa should, before disembarking, pay down Rs. 40 as security or that some one staying there should pay it for him. If this order is notified at the ports at which Indians embark for East Africa, they may stop their journey. It is surprising that restrictions should be imposed on British subjects even in British territories. It is doubly strange that the British Government should have approved of this uncivilised and unjust order. If India were a self-governing country, the Government of British East Africa would have been afraid of passing such an order. When Indians are subjected to restrictions in England itself, what is the wonder in their being subjected to restrictions in the British Colonies? If the Government of India now passes an order that an inhabitant of British East Africa should pay down Rs. 40 before disembarking in an Indian port, it may be a proper set-off for the order passed by the Colonial Government.

Lokopakari, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1916.

Indians going to British East Africa.

40. The Hindu Nesan, of the 16th August, says:—In every country, the English planters are treating the coolies on their estates worse than slaves and the main cause for this is the special privileges granted to these planters by the Government of the country. Sometimes the Government winks at the unjust acts done by these planters. The laws connected with the coolies in plantations are all in favour of the planters. When these laws permit a cooly, who refuses to work in a plantation as agreed by him, being punished with rigorous imprisonment, it goes without saying that they are treated worse than slaves. We understand that this barbarous habit of inflicting rigorous imprisonment on recalcitrant coolies was in vogue in British Guiana, Trinidad, Jamaica, the Fiji Islands and Ceylon till recently, that it has now been abolished in the Fiji Islands and that it is being given up gradually in Jamaica, Trinidad and British Guiana, under instructions from the Secretary of State for the Colonies. When this cruel custom is being given up in every other Colony, we are surprised that the Government of a Crown Colony like Ceylon should be disinclined to abolish it. In reply to a representation made by the local Social Service League that the women and children coolies who are now undergoing rigorous imprisonment under this law should be released and that the custom of inflicting rigorous imprisonment on coolies in plantations should be abolished, the Ceylon Government seems to have declined to grant their request and said that, if women coolies are exempted from the operation of this law, there would be much confusion in these plantations. We cannot understand what confusion will result by such exemption. If coolies working in plantations should stop away without giving notice, it can only amount to a breach of contract which is a civil wrong and can never be treated as a criminal offence, liable to be punished with rigorous imprisonment. Such being the case, it is most unfair that, in this twentieth century, it should be considered to be a criminal offence in the civilised Colonies and punished with rigorous imprisonment, and it is the worst injustice again that women and children should be subjected to this punishment. If it is possible to put a stop to this barbarous custom in other Colonies, how can it be impossible in Ceylon?

will, however, take some time more for the allies to gain the victory. They will have to spend a large amount of money and also meet with a heavy loss of men, but they will certainly come out successful in the end. We pray that God may grant British arms success and establish peace on the earth.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 21st, 1916.

India and the war.

42. In an article under the heading "the war," the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 21st August, writes:—Every patriot is considering how he can best ensure the success of the British arms. The first great requisite is pecuniary resource. Six millions sterling (sic) is needed for each day's expense of the war. This figure denotes the expense incurred by the British alone. Besides this, there are the loans to be given to the allies. Thus, some 70 to 80 lakhs sterling is needed daily. Arrangements have to be made to get all this money. The issue of exchequer bonds bearing interest at 5 per cent is one means of getting it. Strict economy is another. To bring home to the minds of the people the serfdom and other untold calamities which the 400 million subjects of the empire may have to suffer in case Germany should win and to levy a tax of one anna per head is another. To bring home to the minds of the people the glory that would come to them, whether they live or die, if all able-bodied citizens should offer themselves for the service of the empire is another means of promoting success. To provide for the manufacture of munitions in all parts of the empire so as to make them available in sufficient quantities for the British as well as for the allies is another. To organise in India and all other parts of the empire parliamentary institutions as in the United Kingdom and the colonies and to entrust them with the power of managing all their local affairs, leaving only Imperial matters to the Imperial Parliament is another means of helping the cause. But nothing can be more conducive to the promotion of sincere loyalty and thereby to the success of the cause than the extension of Home Rule to all parts of the empire. No poison can have more deadly effect on an empire than autocracy and nothing can resuscitate it better than democratic methods. If the British authorities should realise the truth of this, their empire will remain stable for all time. Else, it is sure to come to grief. History gives us enough instances of nations who thought that their suzerainty would remain as long as there were the sun and the moon and who were wholly wiped out of existence, showing how transitory is their existence. The Imperial authorities should, therefore, bestow some thought on these matters and act with foresight, mindful of the consequences of their policy.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 22nd, 1916.

New Parliament.

43. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 22nd August, writes:—Some people in the United Kingdom are raising a cry that a fresh parliamentary elections should take place, that the present parliament is incapable of conducting the war and that a new Parliament would be more vigorous and manly. The Government should stop this cry. As Sir Douglas Haig tells us, it is difficult to win unless they work day and night, even on holidays. When the British public has conceded the truth of these words, it is surprising how there can be any agitation for fresh elections. Can the British public believe that those who have had so many years' experience of parliamentary work are impotent and that the new comers will achieve wonders? Never! The agitators would do well to realise the value of unity and render some tangible service to ensure victory.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 18th, 1916.

Paris Economic Conference.

44. In a long leading article complaining that despite the services rendered by India to the Empire in the present crisis, she was not accorded the privilege of representation at the Paris Economic Conference, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 18th August, refers to the reply given by Sir George Barnes at Bombay to the questions raised on this subject by the representatives of the Bombay Indian Merchants' Chamber and thereupon remarks that neither the answer that Mr. Hughes and Mr. Foster were present at the conference not as representatives of the colonies in particular, nor the explanation that the conference was only of a preliminary nature and that Indian representatives will be invited at the real conference can be considered satisfactory, for, in the one case, some representatives like Mr. Huges could be sent from here only as Imperial representatives and not as representing India in particular, and in the other case, though it is only natural to fear that India's claims to representation may again be ignored as at this preliminary conference, the Indians cannot do better than remain consoled by the hope that the assurances given by Sir George Barnes will be unfailingly carried out.

The Calcutta Police.

45. The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th August, says that one Pannalal was charged by the Calcutta Police three times with one offence or another and was discharged every time by the court that tried him. The Police thereupon interned him under the Defence of India Act, which, the paper says, is most improper on their part, and is calculated to shake the faith of the people in the fairness of the police. A theft and its detection.

46. Referring to the recent theft, from the Malabar Club, of certain articles belonging to a European, a correspondent in the Manorama, of the 18th August, draws the attention of the authorities to the commendable action of the Sub-Inspector, Mr. Ayyappan Nayar, and of the head constable, Mr. Govindan, which reminds one of "Sherlock Holmes" and his deeds, and condemns the malignant but uncalled for remarks of certain people on the conduct of the police in this case, which cannot fail to have a depressing effect on them. According to the correspondent, these people charge the police with inefficiency when a case goes undetected, and if they succeed in tracing the perpetrators of the crime, these people bring forward the charge of torture against them. The police and nuisance cases.

47. Referring to the discharge, by the Bench Court at Calicut, of one Raman in a nuisance case, on the ground that there was no trustworthy evidence against him, the Kerala Patrika, of the 19th August, observes that it is high time to put a stop to the practice of bringing forward such unnecessary cases by the police, who seem to think that all who drink will commit offences against the people. The Tilak case.

48. The Swadesamitran, of the 14th August, quotes section 108 of the Criminal Procedure Code, under which Mr. Tilak was bound over to keep the peace for one year and observes:—This section is intended only to prevent the commission of future offences and not to inflict a punishment for past offences. So, the main point to be considered now is whether there is sufficient basis for the charge that Mr. Tilak has attempted to disseminate sedition. Two arguments were adduced on the side of the Government. One referred to the speeches said to have been delivered by him with a view to bring the Government into contempt and the other referred to his having been convicted twice already for sedition. The fact of his previous conviction having been adduced as an argument for booking him again and the statement of the Magistrate that as Mr. Tilak's conviction was known to every one, he was justified in basing his judgment thereon will doubtless cause surprise to all legal heads. There are numerous decisions of the High Courts in which it has been laid down that, even in the case of one who has been convicted on several occasions for heinous offences, an opportunity should be given to him to turn over a good leaf after he is released and that security should not be demanded from him to keep the peace on the score that he is a rogue with several SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1916.

previous convictions. If this view is not adopted, when is an offender to repent for his folly ? So we need not point out that the Magistrate was entirely in the wrong in having referred to Mr. Tilak's previous convictions; the only point therefore to be disposed of is whether there is anything in the lectures of Mr. Tilak to warrant security being demanded from him. Section 124-A of the Indian Penal Code clearly refers to acts on the part of any one to promote sedition and, therefore, all that the Magistrate should have done was to see whether Mr. Tilak was about to promote sedition according to this section and he need not have paid any attention to the fact that Mr. Tilak's lectures contained statements which tended to bring the Government into contempt or that he has already been convicted once. So the statement of the Magistrate that Mr. Tilak should thank his stars that the Government had not taken action against him under section 124-A of the Indian Penal Code shows that he has entirely misunderstood the nature of the enquiry he was making. This statement is by itself sufficient to prove that he was prejudiced against Mr. Tilak from the very beginning. The Magistrate himself admits that the aim of Mr. Tilak's lectures was to explain to the people the principles underlying the Home Rule campaign. So, it is clear from this that Mr. Tilak's intention was not to create a feeling of hatred against the Government or to insult the Government officials. Neither the Government nor the Magistrate has stated that Mr. Tilak has attempted to disseminate sedition under the guise of Home Rule lectures. So it is admitted by all that there was nothing wrong about the motive of Mr. Tilak. But it may be stated that, though his motive was not a bad one, he would be guilty of an offence if, by his lectures, he had given room for the people to entertain seditious ideas. Even this argument will not hold good in this case. Though the similes and examples used by Mr. Tilak in his lectures in order to explain the principles of Home Rule to the ordinary people might appear to be objectionable, and though his references to the defects of officials might appear to be disparaging to them, one who reads his lectures through cannot fail to notice the fact that he has plainly stated in many places that the Indians should wish to continue under the British rule for ever and that they could hope to have swaraj like the other subjects of the empire only under this rule. So one who listened to Mr. Tilak's lectures to the end could not have entertained any seditious ideas. Moreover it is not for his lectures that Mr. Tilak is charged now. It is the suspicion that he may disseminate sedition in the lectures which he intends delivering that has made the Government to demand security from him. That the Bombay Government should have stooped to these petty ways does not indicate its liberal views or its sympathy with popular aspirations. It is the prayer of the numerous sympathisers of Mr. Tilk that he would point out before the High Court the legal defects in the proceedings to which he has now been subjected and get the proper remedy.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1916.

Adverting to this case, the Lokopakari, of the 14th August, says:—Reading through the speeches of Mr Tilak, we do not find any statement by him to the effect that the British Government should be changed. What he has been repeatedly stating is that India should have swaraj under the British Government, and that the methods of administration in India should be changed with a view to the attainment of this object. This cannot be considered to be sedition. It is by picking out a word here and there from his speeches and giving them a forced interpretation that the Magistrate has now framed a charge against Mr. Tilak. Evidently any reference to Home Rule is searing the officials and they naturally scent sedition in every speech connected with Home Rule. This is not a desirable thing.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1916.

In commenting upon this subject, the Prapanchamitran, of the 18th August, observes:—The Magistrate, in convicting Mr. Tilak, stated that he should consider himself fortunate that the Government did not proceed against him under section 124-A. The most twisted interpretation of section 124-A cannot make it apply to anything in the speeches of Mr. Tilak. If the Government of Bombay thought that a prosecution under this section would stand against Mr. Tilak, it could have launched it boldly. When it has prevented Mrs. Besant, who is leading the Home Rule campaign, from entering Bombay, when it has declined to give a passport for proceeding to England to Mr. Tilak, who has been working for the same cause for the last so many years and when it has wounded public feeling to a great extent by demanding security for good behaviour from this gentleman, who is very influential and is almost worshipped throughout Maharashtra, we are sure it would not have allowed him to escape a prosecution under section 124-A, if it had the least evidence against him. Why, in the very speeches of Mr. Tilak which have now been found fault with, there are plain statements in many places that in the interests of India, her connection with England and the British public should continue for ever. So there is no meaning in his being charged with attempting to subvert the British Government. Soon after the present war began, Mr. Tilak published an open letter in the papers that he was a supporter of the British Government and that he was praying for the success of the British arms. As for the matter of that, no one belonging to the Home Rule party says that the English rule should cease to exist. Their desire is only that India should freely progress under the supervision of the British Government. No one can deem this wish to be criminal. But all the same it is clear that it is their efforts in connection with the Home Rule campaign that have brought on so many troubles on Mrs. Besant and Mr. Tilak. Thus an attempt is being made by the authorities to suppress the desire for swaraj, which does not contravene any law and which is in the grain of every Britisher and this naturally creates a panic among the people. It is neither just nor wise on the part of the Government to give room for such a panic. The Amrita Bazaar Patrika says, on reliable information, that the Government of India had no hand in the action taken by the Madras and Bombay Governments against Mrs. Besant. We hope that even for the action taken against Mr. Tilak, the sole responsibility rests with the Government of Bombay. Between the two Provincial Governments, the Government of Bombay has proceeded farther than the Government of Madras. The latter demanded security from New India; but as it found that there was then a hue and cry, it woke up and stopped with that. But the former has been following up one action close after another, and if it does not wake up in time, like the Government of Madras, we are afraid that there may be panic and discontent throughout the country.

The Vijayavikatan, of the 19th August, also takes exception to the action taken by the Government of Bombay against Mr. Tilak and reproduces many of the arguments noted above.

VIJAYAVIKATAN, Madras, Aug. 19th, 1916.

Mr. Tilak's case.

In commenting on the judgment in Mr. Tilak's case, the Andhrapatrika, of the 16th August, says:—There might be a strong criticism of the measures of the Government in Mr. Tilak's speeches. But it cannot be said that there was any hatred of Government in them. When making the speeches he said that his criticism was directed against the officers and not against the British rule. When he consented to join the Congress, he admitted that self-government under the British Raj was his ideal. It is thus plain that he does not cherish any hatred for the British rule. To change the present administrative methods is the royal road to the establishment of swaraj. To do so, one must necessarily know the defects of those methods. Rulers like Lord Hardinge admitted that the methods required a change. If imperfections in the administration are laid bare, they may be remedied and mutual affection established between the rulers and the ruled. Had the Magistrate understood the speeches in this spirit he could not have found fault with them. It is a pity that while in England English statesmen say that the policy of Indian administration should thoroughly change, the officers here act narrow-mindedly.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1916.

The Tilak case.

The Swadeshabhimani, of the 18th August, writes:—Mr. Tilak's speeches were given in Marathi. A Marathi short-hand writer took down notes and these notes were translated into English and it is by means of this translation that the Magistrate discovered sedition in the original and ordered that the security should be paid. This lengthy round-about process makes it impossible to say what amount of resemblance there is between the original speech and the translation as produced in the court. The speeches show that Mr. Tilak spoke particularly with reference to the "bureaucracy" in India, and urged that the internal administration of the country should be in the hands of the Indians. At the same time he has said in unmistakable language that India cannot get on without the help of England and that India needs to be under British suzerainty and British supervision. How can general criticism against the officers of Government create disaffection against the King or the Government? Every resolution of the congress is a comment on the conduct of the officials. Are they all seditious then? If to point out the actual shortcomings of the officials, without prejudice to the permanence of the rule, is to be deemed sedition, there is no need to declare further that the people should not write or utter a single word about the officials. Under these circumstances, we fail to see how the British can say that they have given the rights of free speech and of a free press to the Indians. In discussing the law on sedition, we have two things to remember, namely, the object of the speaker and the effect of his words. Now, Mr. Tilak has distinctly emphasized the need for the permanence of the British rule in India. His speech has not resulted in any riot or disaffection. Applying both these tests we cannot help deploring the order passed by the Magistrate. But we are inclined to believe that the Magistrate had not full liberty in the matter. The Bombay Government is responsible for the order. Judging from one or two similar instances of the Bombay Government's policy, we must hope that His Excellency the Viceroy will advise it to exercise better patience at least during this war time.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 18th, 1916.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Aug. 19th, 1916.

The Tilak security case.

49. Referring to the judgment of the District Magistrate in the Tilak security case, the Kerala Patrika, of the 19th August, says:—Though India has a right to get self-government, which the Government themselves do not deny, this is not, in our opinion, the time for it, nor should we use any words, when agitating for it, which are calculated to displease the Government. Whether Mr. Tilak's words were such or not, it is still doubtful. He spoke in Marathi, and errors may have crept in, in the rendering of his speeches into English. In any case, he should not have employed expressions in his speeches that were likely to lead to misconception. The Government, perhaps, acted thus towards him, because he was convicted twice for sedition.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Aug. 22nd, 1916.

The Madras High Court and the University.

50. Referring to the writ of mandamus issued by the Madras High Court against the Syndicate of the Madras University, the Keralodayam, of the 22nd August, says:—It is simply disgraceful that the Syndicate, which is composed of respectable people like the Honourable the Chief Justice of the Madras High Court, the Director of Public Instruction, Principals of well-known colleges in the Presidency and others, should have acted so obstinately as to compel a court of justice to take such a step. What else can the High Court's decision mean than that the action of the Syndicate was wrong? It is to be hoped that the University authorities will not do likewise in future.

(d) Education.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1916.

The future of education.

51. The Swadesamitran, of the 18th August, refers to the attempt made by eminent men like Lord Haldane to reform the existing system of education in England and observes:—If, in Great Britain itself, which stands foremost in the British Empire in the matter of educational progress and culture, it is found necessary to reform the existing system of education from top to bottom, it goes without saying that such a reformation is doubly necessary in India, where only 10 per cent of the population is literate. If India is to advance industrially, scientific and industrial education is quite necessary. It is really a pity that when the people are demanding that a greater amount of money should be spent on education, the Government is pleading want of funds. In this connection we would invite the attention of the authorities to the statement of Lord Haldane, with reference to improving the educational system in England, that there should be no economising in the matter of expenditure on education and that money spent on education would be repaid hundredfold. When Lord Haldane, referring to the educational system in England, has said that she has to bow before Switzerland and take lessons from the United States, we do not know what to say of the system of education in India. This is a grand opportunity for every country in the world to better herself in different directions, and we would impress on the Indians the necessity of making use of it.

Indian students in England.

52. The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th August, says:—The condition of Indian students in England is growing more and more deplorable. They find it very difficult to secure admission into the colleges, factories or Inns. The race-hatred that has taken root in the Colonies is extending to the English educational institutions. Some colleges in Cambridge and Oxford do not admit Indian students at all. Some others admit one or two every year. It is said that if each of the colleges in these two places admit three or four Indians every year, there will be ample room for all who go from here to England to receive education. From this it is evident that Indian students fail to get admission not because they have no seats available for them, but because the University authorities do not like to admit them. In the Agricultural College in Siriniester (sic) only one Indian is admitted every year. The same miserable state of things appears to exist in the Civil Engineers' classes and in the Medical schools. The rulers should know what attitude the students returning from England disappointed will have towards that country. We venture to say that this disability of students is a chief cause of unrest in this country. The Government of India must prevail upon the Government of England to direct the colleges there to admit more Indian students. To look upon Indians, who are British subjects, as foreigners and to refuse admission to them does not conduce to harmonious relationship between England and India.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1916.

The Law College.

53. The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th August, prays that in making the proposed new appointments of professors in the Law College, the authorities will not pass over the claims of Andhras, among whom there are many Vakils and Barristers fit to hold professorships in the college.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 17th, 1916.

Ellore Training School.

54. Referring to the Training School which the Government have decided to establish at Ellore, the Andhrapatrika, of the 18th August, writes:—It is strange that the Government have refused to place the school under the control of the district board. They have not stated the reasons for doing so. In taking this step they appear to have relied on the notes written by an ordinary clerk of theirs. We submit that this is an insult offered to the district board, and hope that the district board will once again apply for the school in question being placed under its control.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1916.

The Senate meeting.

55. The Bharatamata, of the 9th August (received on the 24th August), says with reference to the recent Senate meeting as follows:—When a member of the Senate asked the Hon'ble Sir Sivaswami Ayyar what became of the Hon'ble Justice Seshagiri Ayyar's resolution, he replied saying that the meeting had come to a close. This is strange. Was it just and proper to allow the discussion of a new resolution and accept it, while an old one yet remained undisposed of? Such an irregularity would not be allowed to occur even in ordinary meetings. It is difficult to understand how it occurred in the Senate meeting, and how the members put up with it.

BHARATAMATA, Vizagapatam, Aug. 9th, 1916.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Aug. 18th, 1916.

56. The Yogakshemam, of the 18th August, points out that though the Madras Government had decided to spend about ninety and a half lakhs of rupees for the construction of school buildings, etc., during the years 1914, 1915 and 1916, it is doubtful whether they have yet spent even a fourth part of what they had set apart for the purpose.

Government and the construction of school buildings.

(e) Local and Municipal.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1916.

57. Referring to the resolution passed by the Corporation at its last meeting that the Government of India should be requested to send the Bill to amend the Madras City Municipal Act for the opinion of the Corporation, before allowing the Local Government to introduce it, the Swadesamitran, of the 23rd August, says:—It is really regrettable that the Local Government not only sent up the Bill to the Government of India, without allowing the Corporation to have its say on it, but did not even send a reply to the Corporation, which asked for the Bill being forwarded to it for its opinion. Apart from the unwisdom of the Local Government in not ascertaining the views of the Municipal Commissioners, before submitting the Bill to the Government of India, it is doubtless a sad commentary on the respect which the Local Government has for the Corporation. We are sure the Government of India will clearly understand the meaning of the conduct of the Local Government when the resolution now passed by the Corporation reaches it.

The last meeting of the Madras Corporation.

MUKHBIR-I-DAKHAN, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1916.

58. The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 16th August, writes:—The question, as to why the death-rate among women and children is so high in the Madras Presidency, has, for a long time, been under consideration.

Death-rate in Madras.

The Government of Madras has recently issued an order on the subject which proposes three remedial measures—(1) the appointment, by local committees, of certificated and paid nurses; (2) the training of hereditary Daīs or midwives in mufassal hospitals; (3) the giving of advice, through official and unofficial superintendents, to mothers on the subject of their own health and that of their children.

The paper says that in the entire Presidency there are 400 nurses. Possibly there may be none in certain districts and taluks and obviously the number of nurses is insufficient in proportion to the population. As regards the second measure the training of hereditary midwives it is not known whether they would consent to undergo a course of training. Even if some of them were willing to do so, their number would be inadequate.

The third measure appears to be somewhat difficult because we think the official and unofficial supervision will probably be in the hands of ordinary women and not be exercised by nurses, midwives or lady doctors. This being the case those who are ignorant of the rules of sanitation will be unable to give any advice to mothers.

If the duties be entrusted to girls they will be novices and only capable of advising according to what they may have heard. However, we are glad the Government has not laid much stress on the last proposal and that it is not prepared to make any such appointments in Madras. We are of opinion that they would be productive of no good in the mufassal. Government has been wise in submitting the suggestions to local municipalities for opinion.

We believe the order of the Government of Madras is based on sympathy and benevolence; and it is hoped that its measures will prove effective and that the death-rate will be much reduced. The procedure adopted by the Government certainly merits grateful appreciation.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1916.

59. Referring to the resolution of the Corporation of Madras, requesting the Government of India to refer the Madras City Municipal Bill for its opinion before according their sanction to its introduction, the Andhrapatrika, of the 23rd August, says:— The Local Government would have acted more wisely if they had avoided unnecessary agitation by referring the new measure to the Madras Corporation for its opinion before sending it up to the Supreme Government. It is unfortunate for the people that this did not strike the Madras Government.

(f) Land Revenue and Settlement.

60. The Yogakshemam, of the 18th August, draws attention to the undue strictness of the Revenue officers in Malabar in the collection of land-taxes from the Janmies, without paying any regard to the fact that they have to borrow money for the purpose, as it is not easy to obtain from their tenants the amounts due to them, points out that the amounts, so collected, are kept in the Madras Bank as "current deposits" without any interest at all, observes that such persecution of the Janmies by the Revenue officers has no sanction of the Government, and quotes a recent report of the Madras Government to the Government of India to show that the Revenue Board's instructions in the matter of tax collection are not strictly followed in Malabar.

The collection of the land-taxes in Malabar.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Aug. 18th, 1916.

(h) Railways.

61. Referring to the conduct of the Tahsildar of Gooty, who is reported to have got into a compartment reserved for Europeans and refused to get down when called upon to do so by the guard of the train and also to pay the full fare of the compartment demanded by the stationmaster of Guntakal, the Lokopakari, of the 14th August, says:—If the railway authorities proceed against the Tahsildar, they will not succeed. Though these railway officials do not recognise that it is unjust on their part to reserve a whole compartment for Europeans in a train in which other passengers are huddled together like cattle, the Magistrates cannot be unmindful of this fact. What is the rationale of allowing the Eurasians to get into a compartment reserved for Europeans and preventing the Indians from doing so?

Reserved compartments for Europeans and Eurasians on the railways.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1916.

In its leader on the subject of reserved railway compartments, the Andhrapatrika, of the 19th August, says:—In a compartment intended to seat 10 passengers, there travel 20 Indians, while in a reserved compartment of the same dimensions, there travel only 2 Eurasians. If any Indian enters it, he is turned out by force. The Indian and the Eurasian pay equal fares. Under such circumstances, is it not a violation of British justice that the former should suffer, while the latter enjoys the journey? It is the duty of the authorities to give up the practice of reserving compartments and to afford equal facilities to all classes.

Reserved compartments.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 19th, 1916.

(k) General.

62. Referring to the report of a committee recently appointed by the Government to enquire about the necessity of permitting the export of cattle from India and the restrictions, if any, to be placed on such exportation, with a view to preserve the high quality of the breed in this country, the Swadesamitran, of the 14th August, says:—If it is conceded that it is necessary to preserve intact the high quality of the breed of cattle in this country, we doubt the wisdom of making an enquiry about the necessity of permitting the export of cattle from India. If cattle are exported to Ceylon, Japan, Java and other countries, how can their high breed be maintained in India! The members of this committee themselves admit that, as a large number of Karachi and Ongole cattle are exported to other countries, these breeds are gradually dying out. It is a pity the owners of cattle of good breed in India sell them away, caring for the high price they fetch immediately. We would impress on the people and the Government the necessity for retaining such cattle in this country. The committee says that by the export of cattle of good breed from India, the owners of such cattle gain a good profit and that it would therefore hesitate to suggest that anything should be done to prevent them from getting this profit. It is really regrettable that the members of this committee have failed to recognise that the exportation of cattle in large numbers from this country would tell upon her agricultural prosperity. No one would object to such cattle as are over and above the needs of this country being exported. But the Government is not wise in permitting exportation to any extent, without any reference to local needs.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1916.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Aug. 19th, 1916.

Exportation of cattle from India.

Referring to the report of the committee appointed to consider the advisability of exporting cattle from India to foreign countries, the Kerala Patrika, of the 19th August, disagrees with the committee in thinking that no restrictions need be placed on the exportation of cattle from this country, and observes that though the total abolition of the system may result in considerable loss to dealers in cattle, some restrictions, especially in the case of cattle of fine breed, are absolutely necessary in the interests of the country.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Aug. 14th, 1916.

Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya of Salem and the Madras leaders.

63. The Lokopakari, of the 14th August, expresses its surprise at Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya having been kept out of both the Imperial Legislative Council and presidential chair of the Congress by the Madras leaders and observes:—The representatives of the people should have a broad outlook and work only for the public benefit. As Mr. Vijayarāghava Achārya has been zealously working for the public good ever since the establishment of the congress, he deserves to be honoured by the people. If genuine public work is not appreciated, the worker naturally loses his interest in the matter. We wish the Madras leaders note this. It is regrettable indeed that, actuated by a party spirit, they have ignored the claims of Mr. Achārya this time.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1916.

The Report of the Public Services Commission.

64. The Hindu Nesan, of the 23rd August, welcomes the announcement that this report will soon be published simultaneously in England and in India, and observes:—We are glad that, at least now, the British Government has shaken off the fear that the publication of this report will lead to unnecessary controversy. We cannot see why there should be any controversy by the publication of the report of a Commission, which was appointed to inquire about the feasibility of appointing Indians more largely in the public service.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1916.

The University case.

65. Referring to the decision of the High Court in this case, directing the Registrar to send up the protests of Messrs. G. A. Natesan and K. B. Ramanada Ayyar to His Excellency the Governor, the Hindu Nesan, of the 18th August, observes:—We do not know why the Syndicate was obstinate to the end in this matter. It cannot be said that the members of the Syndicate are incapable of realising the consequences of their obstinacy. That men of high educational attainments should have acted a way which is not consistent with their position and status has surprised many. Anyhow, we would say that members of respectable bodies like the Syndicate of a University should not quarrel in such a manner as to drag them to the Court of Law.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 9th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

66. The Desamata, of the 9th August, quotes the reply of the Bombay Government to the letter of Mrs. Besant requesting them to state the grounds on which their recent order against her was based, and observes:—See how nice and reasonable the reply is! Perhaps it is to give such a reply that they had taken such a long time. See how unfeeling they are! It is this want of feeling that sometimes passes for statesmanship. We thought that unless there had been serious grounds, Lord Willingdon would not have passed such an order. But we have been disappointed. The reply of the Bombay Government is unsatisfactory. They are following a repressive policy which is not only unsuited to the present times, but is also likely to do immense harm.

Mrs. Besant.

The Andhrachandrika, of the 17th August, says:—We are of opinion that during the war there should not be any agitation for Home Rule. When the Bombay Government passed their order against Mrs. Besant we humbly requested her not to make much of little faults of the Government, and were not guilty of any wrong against her. We are no strangers to her loyalty and patriotism. If New India mends its ways, there can be no paper superior to it. We wish that our brethren will not look down upon us as bastards for our criticisms of Mrs. Besant.

ANDHRACHANDRIKA, Proddatur, Aug. 17th, 1916.

Repressive measures.

67. The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th August, reports the Capital to have said:—Anarchism is the enthusiasm of the youth following wrong ways. We are ourselves responsible for allowing the young to tread wrong ways because we do not take steps to develop industries so that they may find employment therein. It is useless and injurious to try to put down anarchism by force of authority. Farsighted people will see that this is the opinion of true statesmen. Such force of authority is used for restoring peace. But it ought to be used in very urgent cases only and that temporarily. It is very injurious to use it without discrimination.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 18th, 1916.

The dye expert.

68. The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th August, says:—It is curious that in this country offices to discharge the duties of which technical knowledge is required are filled by persons who lack such knowledge. The dye expert is now superintending the work done in the paper manufactory. Whether he does anything or not in the matter of dyes, it will gratify the public if he does some useful work in the manufacture of paper.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 18th 1916.

The Congress.

69. The Sasilekha, of the 18th August, is sorry that the clamour for Home Rule is growing more and more intense, and fears that the wheel of progress may thereby be set back and more repressive measures may come into existence. It exhorts the congress leaders not to follow the lead of persons like Mrs. Besant, but to think deeply and conduct the proceedings of the congress.

SASILEKHA, Madras. Aug. 18th, 1916.

Vernaculars.

70. The Kistnapatrika, of the 12th August, says:—Until the vernaculars are made the language of the public offices in a country, its people cannot make any real progress. Not only should the officers have a knowledge of the vernaculars, but all laws, proceedings of the Legislative Councils, decisions of High Courts, constructions of law by lawyers, and Government bulletins should also be in the vernaculars. Only then will knowledge of politics and administration spread among the people.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Aug. 12th, 1916.

In its issue of the 19th August the same paper says:—If ever we should get self-government, it would certainly be possible to carry on the administration in the languages of the country. Self-government without prominence given to the vernaculars is like the drama of Sakuntala without the heroine Sakuntala. When all branches of knowledge are imparted through the medium of the vernaculars, people will easily learn to talk in Hindi, which is an off-shoot of Sanskrit, and all classes of Indians will understand one another through that language. Hindi is widely spoken in Northern India, though not so much in the South of India, but the people here can learn Hindi more easily than English. If one is acquainted with Hindi, he can easily travel all over India. If the proceedings of the Congress are conducted in Hindi for four or five years, the Congress will attract the masses and shine with new life and strength. We submit that just as it is desirable to use the vernacular of a Province in the administration of that Province, so also it is desirable to have Hindi as the common language of India.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Aug. 19th, 1916.

The second anniversary of the war.

71. In its leader on the war anniversary, the Bharatamata, of the 9th August (received on the 24th August), reviews the present situation of the parties to the war and observes:—Our state of affairs is on the whole very encouraging. As for the territories newly occupied, we have more of the enemy's territory than the enemy has of ours. While the enemy's forces are being reduced by lakhs, the British forces, which were only a few lakhs in the beginning, have now grown up to more than fifty lakhs. As regards ammunitions, although the output here has not exceeded that in Germany, yet it is growing greater and greater every day. Financially also we are in a much better situation than the enemy and are able to finance the war operations of our allies.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 16th, 1916.

Mr. Tilak.

72. In commenting on Mr. Tilak's case, the Desamata, of the 16th August, says:—We do not see any sedition at all in his speeches. He compared the king to God, and said that we should all be under the rule of England. In suggesting administrative reforms, he recommended the division of the country on a language basis. He stated that the people should have all power in their hands subject to the control of the English Sovereign. He asked if it was sedition to suggest the removal of one officer and the appointment of another in his place. He criticised the authority exercised by the Civilians in strong terms, but there is nothing seditious in the criticism. But the Government saw sedition in it. Everyone regrets that he is not free to serve the country in the latter part of his life, although he earnestly wishes everlasting fame to the British rule. Nobody suffered so much as this great man for the uplifting of his country. So, the whole of India now sympathises with him in his trouble. It is very much to be regretted that the Government have not permitted him to go to England. He wishes to go there to give instructions to his counsel in a suit against Sir Valentine Chirol. It will be well if the Government reconsider the matter and do him justice.

HITAKARINI, Ellore, Aug. 20th, 1916.

The Hitakarini, of the 20th August, says:—Only the other day the Government of Bombay passed their order preventing Mrs. Besant from entering the Bombay Presidency. Now they muzzled Mr. Tilak. By such acts they are plunging the country in great surprise. We trust that Lord Chelmsford will interfere in the matter and put a stop to such things.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 19th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant and the Presidentship of the Indian National Congress.

73. In a leading article, referring to the several names proposed by the provincial committees of the congress for the presidentship of the ensuing session, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 19th August, writes:—Just at the time the question was being considered by the Madras Committee, Mrs. Besant withdrew her candidature. Not because she did not want the distinction, but partly because she thought that if the people had greater confidence in somebody else, she must not stand in the way of that candidate, and partly because there was no need to hanker after the position when one could do as much service to the congress, even as a mere member and voter in that body. But since the Reception Committee at Lucknow urges her name, there is some likelihood of her being elected. The wishes of the majority of the committees will prevail. In learning, in political acumen, in patriotism, in readiness to sacrifice even life itself for the sake of India, there is none to surpass her either among white or among coloured men. We do not say that she is infallible. No human being can be considered infallible. We must value men by the measure of good which outweighs their defects. Judged by this standard, Mrs. Besant is entitled to our highest reverence and regard better than any Indian. It is believed that as President of the Congress her address will surpass anything that has been heard from that chair till now. But it is important that the President should be a person who is in the good graces of Government. Mrs. Besant is an ardent advocate of Home Rule for India. In her New India she writes against the Government. The Governments of Bombay and Madras are not friendly disposed towards her. The attitude of the Government of India, too, is probably the same. However well-qualified she may be for the Presidentship, we think it would be well to elect one who is held in some regard by Government. Mrs. Besant too is probably of the same opinion.

74. Referring to the deplorable condition of the charitable institutions in Southern India, which may more or less be attributed to the want of proper supervision by the Revenue Board and the officers under them, the Manorama, of the 18th August, endorses the opinions of the "Pilgrims Committee" on the subject, particularly that which relates to the removal of these institutions to places near the railway stations.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 18th, 1916.

The Pilgrims' Committee and the charitable institutions in Southern India.

III.—LEGISLATION.

75. The Kerala Sanchari, of the 16th August, dwells upon the necessity of passing a law to regulate the relations between the Janmies and tenants in British Malabar, and invites the attention of the Hon'ble Mr. K. S. Bhat to the matter.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Aug. 16th, 1916.

The Landlords and tenants in Malabar.

Referring to the article which appeared in the last issue of the Kerala Sanchari, dilating upon the necessity for a law in Malabar, similar to the one now in force in Cochin, to regulate the relations between the landlords and tenants, the Manorama, of the 22nd August, points out that, though for special reasons eviction is resorted to in a few cases, it is not, as the Sanchari says, a common thing in Malabar, and that the passing of such a law will, as in Cochin, only tend to strain the relations between the jenmies and the tenants in Malabar, and observes that, if the Hon'ble Mr. Bhat has the welfare of the people at heart, he will devote his attention to better and more useful things than to getting such a law passed.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 22nd, 1916.

The landlords and tenants in Malabar.

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

76. In reviewing the Budget Estimates of the Cochin Darbar for the Malayalam year 1092, the Malayala Manorama, in its issues of the 16th and 19th August, dwells upon the satisfactory condition of the finances of the State, approves of the various measures, which the Darbar intend to take for the development of the State, and observes that these reveal the high statesmanship of the Diwan, Mr. Bhore. Incidentally the paper draws the attention of the Diwan to the advisability of opening a branch line from Trichur to Kunnunkulam.

MALAYALA MANORAMA, Kottayam, Aug. 16th & 19th, 1916.

The Cochin Budget for 1092.

Referring to the same subject, the Yogakshemam, of the 18th August, points out that according to the estimates, the financial condition of the State appears to be satisfactory, and observes that, while the Diwan is right in thinking that the State can increase its revenues at critical times, only if the people are in a prosperous condition, the measures, such as the extension of the Cochin Railway to Kollengode and of the Forest Tramway, which are good things in themselves, and which may possibly bring increased revenues to the State, are not likely to add to the prosperity of the people, for which the proper remedy is to pay greater attention, first, to indigenous industries, and, secondly, to agriculture.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Aug. 18th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Lokaprakasam, of the 21st August, has the following in English:—

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Aug. 21st, 1916.

* * * * *

The universal cry of war economy emboldens the rightful authority in charge of public funds to inaugurate even distasteful and parsimonious policies. Glancing over the white book lying on our table we find that the Diwan has, with the scrutinising eye of a cautious financier, cut down the budget estimates of almost all departments in the expenditure side so as to tighten the purse strings, so much so that the budget year is expected to close with a balance of Rs. 15·59 lakhs exclusive of a couple of lakhs to be brought forward. Though we are reminded of the national debt that remains to be redeemed we cannot help congratulating Mr. J. W. Bhore, I.C.S., the Diwan, on the statement, which, taken all in all, must be considered a "prosperity budget." The abnormal conditions which have intensified the difficulty of forecasting income and expenditure with any degree of accuracy, says the Diwan, continued throughout the year and the anticipations for the ensuing year are based on the assumption that no further material improvement in trade and shipping conditions is probable in the near future. After the first paralysing effects of almost universal war conditions which upset calculations for 1090 had worn off a partial recovery in trade and business activities due to a fairly ready adaptation to altered circumstances manifested itself, and though normal conditions still remain a future hope, that recovery gathered strength during current year and will, it is hoped, establish itself still more firmly in the approaching year.

During 1091 the effects on the State's finances has been rather in the direction of enlarging expenditure than constricting the income. The experience of the year has proved the strength of the State's financial resources and justifies the taking up for serious consideration of the programme which has had, in prudence, to be deferred until it was possible to gauge with greater exactness the effect on the State's finances of the disruption of the pre-war economic fabric.

The most important financial problem of the future continues Mr. Bhore is to reinforce the sources of income, and all that tends to increase the material prosperity and productive capacity of the people, so as to enable them to comply with further demands upon them, should these ever become necessary, calls for special attention. An appreciation of these facts will help to determine the most appropriate directions in which the State's balances may be invested.

It may not be out of place to refer to possible railway projects. The British Government have treated with prompt and sympathetic consideration the proposal made by the Darbar suggesting the direct linking up of the Cochin-Shoranur Railway with the Dindigul-Palghaut line and the metre gauge system of South India. Should the project materialise, it should help appreciably to increase the volume of trade passing to the port of Cochin and over the State Railway. The question of the Forest Tramway has loomed charge for many years. The proposal for its utilisation, which has been worked out, is still under correspondence with the Madras Government and as it is hoped soon to be able to make a definite statement in regard to it, it will suffice to say that the proposal holds forth some hope not only of securing a return on the capital sunk on the tramway, but also of opening up a hitherto inaccessible area and of materially increasing the volume of trade flowing to the port of Cochin over the State Railway. The Department of Agriculture is given a considerably enhanced provision, as it is proposed to enlarge very appreciably the scope of its activities. Education shows a steady increase, and the anticipated expenditure for 1092 will be 12·4 per cent of the total income of the State for the year. It is proposed during the year to extend the number of rural technical schools and to revise the scheme of State scholarships so as to make it more comprehensive.

* * * * *

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Aug. 22nd, 1916.

The Cochin Budget for 1092.

In reviewing the Cochin Budget Estimates for 1092 M.E., the Keralodayam, of the 22nd August, points out that it is regrettable that for some years past the Darbar have been adding little to the sinking fund, thinks that, though Mr. Bhore has as yet done nothing which reveals his statesmanship, his name will be indelibly impressed on the people's minds, if the proposed extension of the Cochin Railway and of the Forest Tramway, become fait accompli, and hopes that, before he retires from the service, he will show that the charges of incapacity and slowness that are now brought against him, are unfounded.

The Cochin Budget for 1092.

Referring to the Cochin Budget Estimates for 1092 M.E., the Manorama, of the 22nd August, while congratulating Mr. Bhore on his having presented an apparently satisfactory budget, points out that the Darbar's inability to add to the sinking fund leads one to doubt the soundness of the financial condition of the State, and thinks that the Darbar's expenditure under the heads of Education, Forest and Police is out of all proportions to the size of the State, which in extent is only equal to a second-rate district in British India.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 22nd, 1916.

(f) Local Reforms and Settlement.

6. The West Coast Spectator, of the 27th August, remarks:—"Speaking the other day at Madras, at the 'At Home' organised by Sir Subrahmanya Ayyar, the Hon'ble Dr. S. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar, the nominated representative in the Imperial Council, is reported to have said that he proposed to introduce a Bill for permanent settlement in the Legislative Council. Permanent settlement is all well and good, but in the absence of fixity of tenure and fair rent it degenerates into permanent harassment of the occupier and the creation of a class of landed oligarchy privileged to tax their tenants to their hearts' content and to pay a fixed rent to the State.

"The permanent settlement in Bengal resulted in the creation of territorial magnates, rolling in wealth, and agrarian discontent. This necessitated the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act which protects the ryot from rack-renting zamindars and gives him a stake in the land whose fertility he is responsible for. We hope when he introduces the Bill, Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar will not lose sight of the interests of the actual occupier of the land as different from those of his landlord."

Nomination of an Oriya representative to the Madras Legislative Council.

5. Extract from the Report (Part I) of the Vernacular Newspapers of Bihar and Orissa, No. 33, dated 19th August 1916, paragraph 32. The Asha has the following:—"We have received several correspondence from responsible Oriyas expressing disappointment at the nomination of Sri Sobhachandra Singh Deo to the Madras Legislative Council as the representative of the Oriyas under Madras. We do not publish them as it is not our intention to raise a protest at this stage. More than once we had said in this connection that a zamindar as such ought not to be chosen to represent the Oriyas. One who is not an Oriya in sympathies and aims cannot be called a representative of the Oriyas. We regret no heed was paid to this fundamental principle of representation. We hoped to see an educated middle class Oriya in the council to represent the people. But it could not be. What cannot be cured must be endured. Let us hope, however, that the Honourable Zamindar of Sergada will show by his strong and steadfast advocacy of the Oriya cause in the next three years that all doubts and misgivings regarding his work are unfounded and premature."

The Secretary of State and New India.

6. The West Coast Spectator, of the 24th August, states:—"Replying to Mr. Snowden's question in the House of Commons on New India security case, Mr. Chamberlain said that he was 'not aware that every Indian paper of standing had protested or that the action had created indignation throughout India.' And the Right Hon'ble Mr. Austin Chamberlain is the Secretary of State for India responsible to Parliament for the government of India, and presiding over the destiny of three hundred millions of human beings!!

"The answer, as amazing as it is regrettable, indicates how ignorant responsible authorities in England are of the true conditions prevailing in India. It was the late Mr. Wyndham who confessed his 'colossal ignorance' of Indian affairs. When responsible ministers plead such ignorance or do not care to keep themselves in touch with this vast dependency, have we not reason to feel despondent?

"It is the duty of the Secretary of State to learn what real India—apart from Anglo-India—feels and thinks, and he can find a mine of information in Indian newspapers. But, does he read these papers? We are afraid, he does not, which is evident from the reply under notice. He does get information about India, but this information, we suppose, is gathered from the overland editions of the Anglo-Indian papers, and from Wimbledon where retired bureaucrats have their stronghold."

Parochialism in Indian politics.

7. The West Coast Spectator, of the 24th August, writes:—"The defeat of Surendranath Banerjee, C. Vijayarāghava Āchārya and Kesava Pillai at the recent elections ought to supply the Indian politician with much food for reflection. Here are three of the best known Indian politicians whose services to the country are invaluable and meritorious rejected by the electorate in favour of less known and junior publicists. Messrs. Sarma, Srinivasa Sastri and Siva Rao cannot on any account be regarded as deserving greater consideration than the veteran Āchārya or Pillai. The hero of a hundred platforms, the leader of the small but enthusiastic cohorts in the good old days when leaders were few and public spirit at a discount, Vijayarāghava Āchārya ought to be regarded as the Nestor of South Indian politics. He is no mere milk and water politician ready to give up the service of the people for a mess of pottage or a handful of silver; he has, further, suffered for his country in his revolt against bureaucratic high-handedness. It is such a man whom any country might justly be proud of, who has been thrown overboard by a handful of politicians supposed to represent the general public. Cold neglect and unceremonious rebuff are the rewards of years of selfless toil. Have we not, then, reason to ask ourselves the question whether Indian public life has become so irresponsible? . . . . It has openly been said that Mr. Vijayarāghava Āchārya is no Home Ruler, at least of the red-hot variety, that he is not a member of the Young Men's Indian Association, or of the Madras Parliament either! If these are qualifications for leadership, we should at once characterise those who put them forth as puerile. We are greatly amused to read in a certain Madras paper that India of to-day is represented by the organisations just mentioned and, therefore, those who aspire to represent her ought to identify themselves with these bodies!! We are not disposed to attach any the least importance to this interesting dictum, but we must not, at the same time, overlook its significance. . . . . Aggressive and blatant, without any the least claim to speak and act on behalf of the public this clique has elbowed itself to the front and cleverly manipulated the wires controlling the automaton of 'public spirit'. . . . . The result is that the most desirable and the ablest candidate has been shunted back in the interest of a narrow class of 'provincial patriots' who, though Home Rulers, have shown they cannot see beyond their nose".

8. The following appears in the West Coast Spectator of the 24th August:—"Mr. T. Ranga Āchārya's resignation from the Cabinet of the Madras Parliament has been announced. By so doing he has lost one of the qualifications to represent the people in the Legislative Council. We presume he has not resigned his membership either of the Parliament or of the Young Men's Indian Association. If he has, let him be prepared for a defeat at the next general elections to the Council".

"The Madras Parliament".

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 24th, 1916.

9. The West Coast Spectator, of the 24th August, remarks:—"Cases of post office frauds have of late become prolific, the accused being postmasters and postmen. The culprits are invariably sent to the house of correction, and the public are satisfied. We, for our part, are disposed to throw the blame on the Postal authorities who sweat their employees. The latter are given a mere pittance while the responsibility and trust thrown on them are out of all proportions to the duties expected. A peon gets no more than eight rupees which is not even a living wage.

"It is, therefore, no wonder that these men who have at times to deal with enormous sums, succumb to temptation and commit felony. The Post office brings in a very colossal sum annually in net profits to the State, and it is unjust that these profits are swelled up at the cost of the employees, who deserve at least a living wage. You cannot get honesty for a couple of shillings a week, said Disraeli on one occasion; the Post office cannot hope to get paragons of every virtue for a dozen rupees or so a month".

10. The Hindu, of the 26th August, writes:—"We are surprised that the Provincial Congress Committees of both Bihar and the United Provinces have nominated Mrs. Besant to the presidentship of the Congress this year. They evidently have lost sight of the fact that Mrs. Besant at the last meeting of the Madras Provincial Congress Committee expressly withdrew her name from the contest for the presidential nomination, and by two subsequent written communications has affirmed her decision not to wish to become the President, as opinion in the country was divided on the subject. . . . . Unless these committees, then, by their action determined to induce the Reception Committee to set aside the nominations of the majority of the committees, their voting in favour of Mrs. Besant can have no intelligible meaning. . . . . It is much to be regretted that a tangle is being created in the affairs of the congress which bode no good to its healthy development and growth. The country in general is deeply sensible of, and is grateful for, the highly valuable work which Mrs. Besant has been and is doing in the cause of Home Rule or self-government for India. The number of Congress Committees which placed her name in the list of possible Presidents in the preliminary elections showed that they appreciate her services, and have great confidence in her. It is, however, equally clear that the sense of the country is against her being elected President of the ensuing Congress and this conclusion can be supported by several grounds. . . . . It was the rightful turn of Madras now to have one belonging to it as President but the suicidal action of the Madras Congress Committee upon which we have already commented practically barred the election of the distinguished man in its own Province who had secured the largest number of votes in the preliminary nominations, and its own nominee, not having secured any other support, is also out of the running."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 29th August, says :— "We did not expect the Reception Committee of the Congress to act so foolishly and with so little regard for the interests of the Congress as it has done in regard to the Presidentship of the Congress. Mr. Ambika Charan Muzumdar has obtained a clear majority of votes and they are unanimous votes. The two votes obtained by Mrs. Besant are both divided votes. Yet a majority of the Reception Committee thinks that it has the right to dictate to Congress Committees to accept its decision, rejecting the decision of the country. Did the Reception Committee conceive it to be possible that the All-India Committee would support its divided decision, ignoring the unanimous decision of so many as five committees in favour of Mr. Ambika Charan Muzumdar, and why did it, if it thought that it would not accept Mr. Muzumdar. . . . . That the All-India Committee would accept the view of the majority of the Reception Committee, ignoring the view of the seven committees which did not think it expedient or just to vote for Mrs. Besant, is the wildest of hopes ever entertained among Congressmen. And except that the nomination of the President will be delayed by a few weeks, the Reception Committee can do no harm to the Congress. . . . . That this year's Congress can be held with Mrs. Besant as President is the wildest idea; and we should be surprised if any serious minded Congressman entertained it. What, then, is the meaning of the resolve to refer the matter to the All-India Congress Committee ?"

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 26th, 1916.

"One type of patriotism."

11. New India, of the 26th August, observes :— "We confess we cannot admire the patriotism of the British shipping line that refuses to carry jute, as undertaken, for war purposes to Dundee, because the contract of buying in India is granted to a Greek firm of British sympathies. The grant of the monopoly may be a wrong move, but does that justify the action of the shippers in disorganising Government plans concerning the war? Whither goes the appeal to Indians not to embarrass the Government in times of war? But the sauce for the Indian goose is not palatable for the English gander."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 26th, 1916.

The security demanded from New India.

12. New India, of the 26th August, has the following :—

"May 26th to August 26th 1916.

"On the 26th May 1916, a notice was served upon me, ordering me to appear before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, to deposit security for the New India Press to the amount of Rs. 2,000, under section 3 (1) of the Indian Press Act of 1910. Accordingly, on June 5th, I duly attended and paid over Rs. 2,000.

"The fact that the highest permissible security was imposed at once showed that the Government was incensed; the refusal to point out anything to which objection was raised indicated that they preferred that I should repeat the unknown offence and thus forfeit the security, and enable them to extinguish the paper. I carried on New India exactly on its previous lines, modifying nothing, and expected to be called up again in a week or ten days. The great outburst of popular indignation was the apparent cause of no action being taken. It was, and is, felt, that when New India is killed, all Indian papers, which show any independence, will sooner or later follow it to the burning ghat.

"We have now arrived at August 26th, and three full months have passed since the demand for security was made, and our little battleship is still above water, with its Home Rule flag nailed to the mast Clouds of all sorts, threatening imminent disaster, have gathered and darkened our sky, but the storm has never burst. There have been rumours of internment, rumours of security bonds, rumours of prosecution for sedition, rumours of enhanced security on New India. But nothing has come of any one of them. The original security remains, absolutely disregarded by me, a futile proceeding which has only made the Government (for the time being) unpopular, and the cause of Home Rule enormously more popular. The Indian papers all over the country are speaking out and demanding India's rights as they have never spoken before, and they are all standing together. Three months, during which the sword has been hanging over my head, have passed, and we enter, with cheerful heart and unchanged will on our 'second quarter under security'.

"ANNIE BESANT,
"Editor."

New India and the Press Act

13. The Hindu, of the 28th August, writes:—"We regret to learn that the Madras Government have issued an order declaring the forfeiture of the security of Rs. 2,000 deposited on behalf of the New India Printing Press. The news was not unexpected, though we had entertained hopes that the Government would take stock of the situation and not give cause for increased bitterness in the public mind by putting in force the rigorous provisions of the Press Act."

HINDU, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1916.

In a further article on this subject the Hindu, of the 29th August, says:—"We publish in another column the order of the Madras Government declaring the forfeiture of the security deposited for the New India Printing Press. We have perused some of the articles which, in the opinion of the Governor-in-Council, fortified we presume with the opinions of the Advocate-General and the Public Prosecutor who recently were sent for to Ootacamund for consultation, are of the nature described in section 4 (1) of the Indian Press Act. No. 3 of the articles is the following, and if the opinion of the Government is in accordance with the existing law, the Government may be said to hold in the hollow of its hand the fate of every newspaper in the country:—

HINDU, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1916.

"Latest sin of Arms Act.

A dacoity of a very serious nature was committed on the night of the 9th instant, in the house of a rich merchant of Viddigudam, in Bhadrachalam taluk. In all besides havoc of an unknown nature, some 2,562 sovereigns, property valued at Rs. 12,000 and Rs. 2,000 in cash were stolen. The victim bitterly complains of the helplessness of the villagers to offer any resistance, 'as they, one and all, in the village are unprovided with arms'. Evidently the villagers were in a mood to resist, but were helpless, while enemies of society felt so safe that they could enter a town 'swinging swords and playing kolatam." Cannot he too, who hoards up thousands of sovereigns—to offer them, alas, as Nazaras to dacoits—be credited with implicit loyalty and be exempted from the Arms Act? Are not his vested interests enough guarantee for his good behaviour? Or are his wealth and influence objects of distrust?' No. 3 New India, 14th June 1916.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1916.

The following are extracts from the leader in New India of the 29th August:—

"The sentence of death.

By Annie Besant.

"That is what the order of the Government of Madras really is—a sentence of death, not on New India only, that were a small thing, but on the freedon of the Press in India, for the form which the order has taken goes beyond anything which has been known since the Press Act of 1910 was passed. I say 'a sentence of death,' not an infliction of the penalty. The penalty may come at any moment, as it has come to New India, and it will come sooner if the journal be outspoken and brave, later if it yields to circumstances. I had refused to credit the rumour that all free discussion was to be stopped in India, but I am now obliged to admit that the incredible thing has happened, for as we shall see, by analysing the extracts given in the order, mere news, mere statements of fact, may, at the mere pleasure of the executive, be made grounds of forfeiture of the security. Moreover the order goes beyond the Press Act, but of that later. . . . . It will be noticed that the Government carefully avoids saying under which letter of the alphabet the 'offences' are supposed to come. These are the only offences which entitle the Government to declare the security forfeited, when, 'in its opinion,' they have been committed. . . . . Does any one of the extracts bring into 'hatred or contempt' 'any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India'? That is the point really at issue that will have to be argued in the High Court.

"But there are some quite new offences discovered:—

"1. A newspaper is endangered if it publishes an item of news on a dacoity, which says that the victim complained of the villagers being 'unprovided with arms' and if it asks whether a rich man might not be exempted from the Arms Act.

"That is to say that the mildest reference to the Arms Act, suggesting an exemption, is a basis for forfeiture of security. Congresses, Conferences must not propose repeal nor even exemption.

"2. No objection must be raised to illegal action on the part of railway officials, and illegal class privileges must not be recorded nor commented on.

"(a) It is not an offence for an Anglo-Indian newspaper to uphold illegality.

"3. It is an offence to record some news items, but it cannot be said beforehand which items should be omitted from those passed by the Censor.

"4. It is an offence to mention facts, if the facts be unpleasant to Anglo-Indians.

"5. It is an offence to object to racial distinctions.

"6. It is an offence to print extracts from other papers.

"7. It is an offence to defend liberty in England.

"8. It is an offence to object to coercive legislation. The Bishop of Madras has argued on the same lines as Exhibit 6, and the papers which printed his remarks on England in Europe and in India are endangered.

"9. It is an offence committed also by Lord Carmichael—to recognise the only effective cure for anarchism.

"10. It is an offence to mention the Bombay Government's order against me, and to say it will not stop the wish for Home Rule.

"11. It is an offence to refer to a violent attack made by an Anglo-Indian on myself. N.B.—It is not an offence for Anglo-Indian papers to abuse me as a criminal and to tell lies about me. (See the Times of India, the Englishman, the Madras Mail, etc.)

"12. It is an offence to say what internment means.

"13. It is an offence to show any kind feeling towards a respectable gentleman suddenly arrested.

"14. It is an offence to quote an article on Home Rule from another paper, which says that we want self-government, that unity is strength, that we should not cringe.

"15. It is an offence to object to 'bonds for good behaviour' being taken from a man like Mr. Tilak.

"16. It is an offence to object to the Hon'ble Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri's views on the duty of newspapers, and to mention certain facts which render comment necessary.

"The creation of all these new offences means the death of Indian journalism, and that is why this order is of such far-spreading importance. It is not one paper which is killed, but all papers that are menaced, save those which fawn on Government. The end may come sooner or later, but it is in sight.

"Under these circumstances, what is my duty? I appeal to the High Court, as the Press Act allows, and ask for protection against the Executive. Many an English Law Court has stood between the subject and the arbitrary power of the Executive. It may be that the Madras High Court will so stand. As soon as the necessary papers are drawn up, I apply the Court, and bring this Executive Order before it. If it decides for the Executive, it means that free discussion must stop all over the Madras Presidency.

"This is the last number of New India, at any rate until the Court here, or the Privy Council, has decided that no offence has been committed. Meanwhile the Executive Order renders useless an expenditure on buildings, machines, type, furniture and purchase money of journal of Rs. 1,42,000, and a cash loss of Rs. 86,873—in all Rs. 2,28,873. This is not a forfeiture by the sentence of a Court of Law, but by an Executive Order.

"From my readers, I ask for patience for a short time, while the paper is suspended. If it is finally stopped, we shall, of course, repay all balance of subscriptions, and any other liabilities. But perhaps they will not mind bearing for brief while this little loss. I love the paper and the work, but I regret nothing, for it has done good service. The work will not stop because the paper dies. And so farewell. 'GOD SAVE INDIA.' 'VANDE MATARAM'".

New India, of the 29th August, observes:— NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1916.

"What will you do?

"Our readers will see from the order of the Madras Government printed in our to-day's issue that this organ of Home Rule, this tool which has been efficiently wielding its beneficent influence in the sacred cause of India, this channel through which the voice of our people was made articulate, is under a sentence of death. We know fully our own duty: New India, if it has to die, will die a glorious death and take a quick rebirth to carry on its holy task. New India is a soul and has a body, at present a daily paper, through which it reaches thousands of Indians. . . . . New India will never die: the death of its body, though painful to those thousands who are near and dear to it, cannot be accomplished unless the high gods wish it, and what they wish will be for the best—'Therefore you should not grieve.'

"We also know what the bureaucratic administration will do: let us not forget that it is fighting for its very existence, which New India has been threatening, and our great hope lies in the very fact that they oppose us in the spirit and manner they are doing. It shows that the 'heaven-born Civil Service' has recognised the truth of the ideals for which New India fights, and loving their heaven—we cannot blame them for that, for who can resist the attraction of living in this sacred land of Rishis—they dislike to be in it without the power of the immortals, which they have wielded for many years past, but to the detriment of the Motherland.

"Thus, you, reader, find yourself in the position analogous to that of Arjuna—in the midst of the two armies: New India and the Madras Government which seem so anxious to kill it. What is your duty? . . . . Help New India with your enthusiasm, earnestness and frank and open support. You agree with the ideal of Home Rule to be gained by law-abiding and constitutional ways?—well then, make that ideal your own and work for it during the day and dream of it during the night, meditate on it in the small hours of the morning and pray for it all day long—and remember work is worship--and review before you sleep how you have laboured for the motherland. Your cause and your country's make one, and have the courage of your conviction. Demand Home Rule openly, and if any tell you that you are unfit tell them that their tongue is false. Take note of it and repeat it--India is ready for self-government. She is quite fit for Home Rule, and it is but the selfish voice of vested interests that tries to chill your enthusiasm and mar your earnestness. Read the history of any civilised country and you will know for yourself your own strong position. Study the present-day conditions of any advanced nation, and you will perceive at once your right to hold your head high. The soul of New India will be there to advise you, to help you, to instruct you, to inspire you--do not be faint-hearted, do not be despondent, for righteousness is on our side and success therefore is certain beyond doubt. . . . . Union with the beloved motherland is our ardent desire, therefore let us worship the lord of yoga--Shri Krishna, the mighty avatara. And let us all remember that where He is 'assured are there prosperity, victory and happiness' ".

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1916.

Writing under the heading—

"The loss of New India,

New India, of the 29th August, remarks :—" Those who have at heart the welfare of Indian youth will be profoundly distressed at the action of the local Government in forfeiting the security attached to the New India press, thus imperilling the existence of New India itself. None who have not been in close touch with the aims and aspirations of young India can have any conception of the restlessness of the student population throughout the country. Finding little guidance in the home and still less—or the reverse—in school and college, they do not know where to turn for sympathy in the expression of that love of country which finds a home in the heart of almost every young Indian throughout the land.

" Among themselves they talk freely, but their voices are hushed on the appearance of the teacher. They look everywhere for the expression of sentiments they themselves feel, but cannot utter; and the result is that they grow up with the better side of their natures stifled and therefore bitter. There is only one remedy for this, as there is only one outlet if the remedy be not forthcoming. The remedy lies in a complete change of attitude on the part of the authorities. . . . . Fortunately, however, there has been up till now New India to do for patriotic aspirations that which these need if they are to be of value. New India has striven, and may we say, successfully striven, not alone to give voice to the longing of the Indian people, but to show how these longings may be wisely expressed so as to bring glory to the motherland and unity to the empire. . . . . We know numbers of young men who turn to New India for that sympathy and understanding they ought to find in people rather than in newspapers, but which they find in newspapers rather than in people. The editor of New India has received hundreds of letters from young men all over the country rejoicing that New India shows them how to reconcile their patriotic devotion with that larger patriotism which is the vitality of the empire as a whole. And now New India is under sentence of death! What conclusion must its younger readers come to? That frank expression of opinion is not tolerated, that injustice must not be disclosed, and above all, that honest convictions are far more dangerous to their possessors than hypocrisy and concealment.

" New India has stood for religion as an integral part of national life. New India has stood for true loyalty the Imperial Crown. New India has stood for devotion to the motherland. With these ideals before us, we have sought to point out defects so as to remove grievances, thus to promote unity and friendship among the different races and faiths which go to the making of our empire. For this, New India has been struck, and if it be struck to death the hopes of those who trusted to it to lead them will be turned into despair.

"The task of thoso who love young India and who seek to train Indian youths to combine passionate devotion to the motherland with eager service to the King-Emperor and his vast Empire will, indeed, be hard if New India goes; for there will be one great influence the less for guiding an ardour and an enthusiasm which grow in force day by day."

The following appears in New India, of the 29th August:—

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1916.

"Lift up your heads.

"There is a tendency on the part of many who are not accustomed to the ups and downs of political life to accept defeat on the slightest attack, and there may be some of the timid order who will imagine that because New India has again been attacked, therefore all is lost. We have much sympathy for those who live in isolated parts and who are thus debarred from the inspiring effect of association with others in the same cause. They hear little of all that is really going on, they are largely at the mercy of the official who rules their district, and they tend to assimilate the inevitable intertia of the little pools of water which lie dormant while the great feeding stream rushes tumultuously by. Rumour is often so swift and so evil that its hearers become paralysed before the facts have time to reach them, and we do not doubt but that in many out-of-the-way places Mrs. Besant is already in prison, interned, deported, hanged, drawn and quartered, or involved in whatever exaggeration Dame Rumour may have assumed in her cynical eagerness to deceive and alarm.

"Let us endeavour to reassure such of our friends as may be inclined to walk about with solemn faces uttering despairing cries. Many people thought, when first the security was imposed upon the New India press, that it was the beginning of the end. Mr. Chamberlain probably assumed it was not merely the beginning of the end, but the end itself, for he remains blissfully ignorant, does our know-nothing friend, of all that has taken place since. For him, New India became a chastened and subservient organ the moment the bureaucracy turned towards it a frowning visage.

"What are the facts? Thanks to innumerable meetings of protest and emphatic expressions from India's leading men the Government of Madras paused while New India went merrily along. Indeed, the bureaucracy has been left behind—the pause was fatal, for while the body of New India may succumb to the executioner, the spirit it has sustained and spread has become unquenchable. The imposition of the security a few months ago was but the beginning of a new beginning and not of an end, and the cause for which New India stands is far stronger to-day than it was thirteen weeks ago. When New India first established itself in public favour, people needed the paper to support the growth of the cause. To-day, they may be able to do without their paper, but they can never again do without the cause."

The Hindu, of the 30th August, states:—"As Mrs. Besant has declared her intention to appeal to the High Court against the order of forfeiture of the security deposited for the New India Printing Press, no further editorial comment will be made, and correspondence on the subject will not be inserted in our columns. We are glad to see from Mrs. Besant's communication that the publication of New India will be continued after the deposit of fresh security. Its entire disappearance would be a grave loss to the journalistic world and to Indian public life, and we should welcome the continuance of its career for the public good, with scrupulous regard for official susceptibilities, and for the provisions of the Indian Press Act, which its gifted editor is capable of understanding and acting up to, as much as anybody else. We regret very much to see that the Madras Government has also required a security of Rs. 5,000 from the Vasanta Printing Press at Adyar."

HINDU, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1916.

New India, of the 30th August, has the following:—

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1916.

"New India.

"By Annie Besant.

"The order served on me on the 28th instant, late in the afternoon, was dated on the 25th and is effective from the date of issue. It, therefore, rendered the possession of our printing press illegal from September 3rd, unless fresh security were lodged, and the dismantling of the press became immediately necessary, if I was to avoid a fine of Rs. 5,000, or two years' imprisonment or both. . . . . Under these circumstances it seemed foolish to print New India for the increase of exhibits in the police museum, and to pay a second security for the sake of having it forfeited and the press seized, without being able to ensure the papers reaching the public.

"I, therefore, agreed to suspend the paper until the High Court decided for or against the case, or even until the Privy Council had done so.

"But, on fuller consideration, I think it better to run the risk. . . . . The Executive may choose to go outside the statute and seize by its own power, having declared 'all copies' forfeited. I said sometime ago—and the Madras Times reprinted it with a sharp comment—that there was no security for property or liberty of person under the present autocracy. It has often been proved and if it be proved again in my own case, it will cause attention to be drawn to the fact in England, as attention has not been drawn in the case of persons less well known.

"A subsidiary reason for lodging the second security is that I received a telegram last night offering money, and that makes it easier for me to go on. The Government is ruining me financially, and as much of my expenditure on buildings and newspaper has been from money generously lent by friends without security, I felt less free to risk the property which I have regarded as theirs. Legally it was mine, since they have no bonds; morally I felt it was theirs. The building will cover a great part of my debt to them. The generous gift of the security lightens me much."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1916.

The following are extracts from the sub-leader in New India of the 30th August:—"Lately, when expecting an Order of Internment, I wrote the following article for New India, before it was to be closed down, and under present conditions, I reprint it here. It is, at present, happily, not my 'last article'.

"TO COME AGAIN.

"In the two years of our life together ties have been made that no Governments can break, links of common love and comradeship that stretch far into the future. Though for wise purposes of effective work I wear in this birth a western body, it is only the Sthula Sharira that is foreign; the Sukshma Sharira was shaped and trained under Indian skies; and though it has sometimes been uneasy in its foreign garment, yet it has fairly well compelled that garment to adapt itself to its owner's higher vehicles. My Hindu readers, who know the truth of Reincarnation, will understand my love of India, and will understand also that which puzzled many in 1893–94, why I fell at once into the small details of Indian living, 'as though born here,' many would say. . . . . The plan of work was wise and sequential—not of my devising. First, to arouse pride in the country's past, to revive faith in Hinduism as the religion of the vast majority, but a Hinduism freed from modern accretions, a Hinduism friendly to other faiths, as it had been in the past. Let me not be misunderstood; I am not arrogating to myself this work of revival as mine; I am but one of a group of workers who wrought for it, who have been preparing the way and creating the results, from Ram Mohan Roy, who began it, to Swami Vivekananda of our own day; Sir Valentine Chirol's great grievance against me was that I, a western woman, proclaimed the superiority of the east, and so strengthened the Hindu revival; there came in the use of the white body at a time when the west was half persuading the east that the sun had reversed his course. . . . . The fourth step was political, the working for India to become a free nation in a Commonwealth of free nations under the Imperial Crown of Great Britain, the steady pressing of India's claim to an equal place in the Empire. For this the Commonweal was established in January 1913; for this the Madras Standard was bought, and began its work on July 14, 1914, soon to be re-named New India, a name significant of its mission; for this the declared propaganda of Home Rule has been carried on since September 14, 1914; for this New India dies today. (Not so now) . . . . If the Government were right in imposing the security, they were wrong in not forfeiting it Had they done so, New India would have stopped, for though I might have collected the Rs. 10,000 security, I should, after paying it, have continued the same policy, and then they would have forfeited the security, and seized the press, as they did in the case of the Comrade. The Press Act is drawn with diabolical cleverness; no amount of personal devotion, of personal sacrifice, can save a paper from destruction.

"This bureaucratic interference with the liberty of the press was followed by the blank discharge of the Government of Bombay; its order of exclusion is insulting and arrogant, but of no practical importance in the great work. These two actions derive their importance only from the spirit they show They prove that the policy of Lord Hardinge is cast aside; that the policy of Lord Curzon is renewed. The bureaucracy has found its tool for the repression in which its soul delighteth. It is true that Lord Chelmsford's past career shows none of the ability of Lord Curzon, but the autocratic spirit is the same. He has a Unionist Secretary of State behind him, chosen, apparently, for his ignorance of India.

"The bureaucracy and the autocracy may harden their hearts like Pharaoh, but none the less has the divine command gone forth: 'Let my people go.' An Indian Moses shall arise to lead them into the promised land of liberty, 'a land flowing with milk and honey'. . . . . Soon after the rumour of my internment reached us, a very noble offer was made to me. Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Ayyar offered to take my place, and, as a practising vakil, cannot be an editor—or have any connection with a newspaper—to renounce his career at the bar. For a young man thus to sacrifice position, a large income, official approval, and all hope of rising in the profession in which he had every prospect of high preferment, shows the stuff of which he is made, and marks him out as a political leader whom the people may trust in the future, incorruptible by the bribe of office, and immovable in the face of threat. . . . . Had it been possible to save the paper, I would have accepted the offer. But the autocracy has only struck me down to get rid of my paper. Only by its destruction is my internment made useful. The Press Act can stop the paper by forfeiture, the Offence Act by seizure of property. But when the Offence Act dies, I shall be free, I can again take up my work.

"If I transfer the press to a new proprietor, publisher and a printer, new declaration must be made, new security imposed; a censor can be put in charge in the office as with the Hamdard and every proof made to pass through his hands. Of what use is a paper under such conditions? The Hamdard struggled on, till the paper's contents were rendered so worthless that it died of inanition. . . . . There is no dishonour in being crushed by an autocracy; there is infinite dishonour in yielding to it. As Charles Bradlaugh told the House of Commons to its face, when it kept him out of his rights by force: 'You may break me, but I will never bend.' And so I say to the tyranny which has struck me down. . . . . We are at the beginning of a great struggle—the struggle for Indian freedom—and it will not cease until that freedom has been won, and India lives at peace, unharried by Prussian legislation. The young men are coming on, and there are men in the prime of their manhood ready to lead at any cost. There need be no fear, no anxiety. I am old, but ere I pass over, I shall see our India free, in quiet possession of Home Rule. . . . . Economical work is wasted without political freedom, for bureaucratic legislation makes successful trading well nigh impossible for the Indian. Compare the trade expansion of India and Japan, and the difference between Home Rule and Foreign Rule is patent. Moreover, while we are told to be silent, the British Parliament is discussing the abolition of some of our guaranteed rights, and the introduction of new, and even of foreign, elements into our Government; we are to be silent while this is going on. . . . . Can autocracy go further? If we submit to this, unsanctioned as it is even by coercive legislation, we deserve to be enslaved.

"I have done what I can, after the example of my old political leader Charles Bradlaugh, to fight bad laws by legal means. . . . . My last words to you who love India are:

"All our energies must be one-pointedly aimed at our political redemption, else, as a nation, we perish. To breathe the atmosphere of coercion is intolerable. Without the atmosphere of freedom, we cannot live, and so, as I go away, my readers, I wave my hand in cheerful greeting, and cry to you:

"TO COME AGAIN.

"To have the glorious privilege of suffering for India is the crown of a life which has ever striven to stand for truth and freedom. I cannot deny in my old age the principles of my youth and maturity. Who shall deny to me the right to call myself a child of the motherland, when I suffer for her dear sake? I have been one of God's messengers to India, and he has many more, greater and better than I, to send for her redeeming from bondage. 'When half-gods go, the gods arrive.

"ANNIE BESANT."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1916.

A medical transfer.

14. The Indian Patriot, of the 29th August, states:—"The rumour that Major Rogers, I M.S., of the 73rd Carnatic Infantry Military Hospital, is to be in charge of the Municipal Hospital and the Jail has, we understand, created a great deal of uneasiness at Trichinopoly. . . . . Major Rogers may be a most estimable man, but if he has to be provided for by all means let him find some other station. Whatever may be his reasons and wants, they are not reasons for disturbing arrangements which are highly satisfactory to the public and from the point of view of public service, very efficient. Europeans at Trichinopoly think very highly of Dr. Madhava Menon, and there is no earthly reason why Dr. Madhava Menon should be sent away. We protest strongly against the transfer, and should it take place, it will not merely create a precedent and a very bad one too, that exigencies of public service mean only the convenience of Indian Medical Service men, but will cause a great deal of public dissatisfaction and will lead to unnecessary agitation."

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

MYSORE PATRIOT, Mysore, Aug. 29th, 1916.

Mysore Police maladministration.

15. The Mysore Patriot, for the week ending 29th August, writes:—"As long as the case against Mr. Advocate Garudachar was sub judice, we carefully abstained from saying anything on it, although the selfrestraint was far from easy. It is hard to remain quiet while an outrage is being perpetrated in our midst. The publication of the Chief Court judgment removes all cause for silence.

"The terms in which Mr. Justice T. Paramasiva Ayyar has condemned the proceedings of the Police from beginning to the end of this prosecution are scathing enough. We can only compare our state of mind throughout its duration to a frightful nightmare, and we have been wondering whether we were living in a backwater indigenous state, with Mogalai Zulum as the dominant principle, or under the ægis of our benign Maharaja, whose righteous reign has been justly compared with that of the divine Ramachandra of historical fame. . . . . We think that these reasons (i.e., Mr. Garudachar's public spirit and independent behaviour) and many others germane to them, formed the main springs at the back of the brains of the Shimoga authorities in launching this prosecution against Mr. Garudachar, which has resulted, thanks to the sense of justice, fearless fairplay of the Chief Court, in the most scandalous expose which we have had the misfortune to meet even in the dark annals of police outrage. . . . . We affirm here that we hold no brief for Mr. Garudachar. Indeed we cannot claim to be intimately acquainted with him. But from the known facts, as elicited and published in a judicial trial, we cannot but condemn the whole action of the police in Shimoga as altogether atrocious and unworthy of the best traditions of the Mysore administration. . . . . If such glaring oppression is not sternly punished, who can be safe in this land?"

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

16. The Sasilekha, of the 25th August, has the following note :—Hungary: A certain man writes that Austria has sent 60,000 soldiers to defend Hungary and so the Russian armies cannot enter it.

Hungary.

Sasilekha, Madras, Aug. 25th 1916.

17. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 22nd August, writes :—Readers of the Jaridah are aware that on the authority of some disinterested and independent correspondents we have stated that domestic dissensions had broken out in Germany, that some complained of heavy taxation, others of the scarcity of food while the majority of the people were desirous of peace. It is now obvious from telegraphic information that the whole nation from the private to the General is anxious for peace ; soldiers and civilians alike have been convinced by repeated and successive attacks that the allied offensive will succeed and that, ultimately, Germany will suffer an ignominious defeat. Hence civilians are of opinion that it is advisable for Germany to make peace so that tranquility may be restored and the country saved from starvation. Officers are showing signs of being disheartened and their inability to withstand the Allies.

Germany and peace.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1916.

In conclusion the paper says the whole world is weary of the long war and the German forces, baffled by the success of the Allies, are anxiously listening for the word "peace". The journalistic world also regards with aversion this sanguinary spectacle which has been going on for the last two years. Commerce, too, has suffered irreparable loss. It is, however, a matter for thankfulness that the strength of the enemy is on the wane and that he is recovering from the effects of the intoxication of pride and that in a chastened mood he is desirous of peace.

18. The Qaumi Report, of the 23rd August, in a leader under the marginally-noted heading, writes :—The latest news relating to the Mesopotamia affair is that the Commander-in-Chief in India has been recalled. Probably his evidence will be taken and it is hoped that he will be found innocent. It appears from the papers that the people of England are getting fidgety over the reverses in Gallipoli and Mesopotamia, and their lamentations are loud and pathetic.

"But a little matter long drawn out."

Qaumi Report, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1916.

The London Times also is looking askance at these incidents and in its issue of the 12th July under the heading, "Responsibility in Mesopotamia," it has indulged in some severe criticisms and has proved, as it were, that Indian Military administration is defective. Whereupon Sir Moore O'Creagh wrote a sharp rejoinder to the Times proving the blamelessness of the Indian Military Administration.

Another paper, a weekly journal John Bull, has, in its issue of July 22nd, a harrowing account under the heading of "The tale of woe of the Tigris," by Mr. A. G. Bitlis. According to his ideas a spirit says "punish those who have made a mistake," and so long as certain incompetent persons are not made an example of the war will not prosper.

Very few people in the world are acquainted with current events. In Europe the idea of fate does not emanate from the head. In their philosophy human beings seem to have four eyes, two in front and two behind, to enable them to escape from everything. It is regrettable that these people regard the reverse in Mesopotamia with great passion and rage. Have they never calculated what real war is. Are they acquainted with the sanguinary struggle ? Are they aware that the eyes of the Kaiser have been for a long time gazing at them with venomous regard ?

Mesopotamia and the Dardanelles are but a corner of the real theatre of war, and no nation can regard these accidental or necessary losses as serious. The idea that certain officers have committed a blunder in this expedition or that the troops have not received supplies through the negligence of the authorities or that the transport system broke down owing to lack of ships, or that General Townshend and his army surrendered because of the delay in the arrival of reinforcements, or that the wounded were not treated in time or that medical stores were not satisfactory. . . . .

Briefly, if the objections of the London Times and John Bull are allowed to pass unchallenged, we openly assert that this is war and not a time for besmirching people's reputation.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1916

19. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 24th August, in a leader under the marginally-noted heading, says:—The justice, kind treatment and considerateness of our Government are not limited to friends but extend also to foes as well.

British sympathy.

In the present war innocent women and children have been murdered and prisoners of war have been shot by the treacherous and cruel Germans. This fact will be recorded in letters of blood in the world's history.

It is an admitted fact that one never likes to praise one's enemy. But the generosity, indulgence and kind treatment shown by our Government extort appreciation from the enemy. In support of this statement the editor quotes a letter written by a German prisoner to his family in Germany in which he refers to the good treatment he received at British hands.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1916.

20. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 24th August, says:—The forces and weapons used by Britain in the battlefield cannot be faced by the enemy.

"The British army and weapons."

The enemy is convinced that his modern inventions are of no use against Britain's new weapons.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 20th, 1916.

21. The Qaumi Report, of the 20th August, in a leader on the marginally-noted subject, writes:—The Qaumi Report, ever since its first appearance, has been endeavouring to make an impression upon Mussalmans and to touch the sympathetic among them. God knows the nature and extent of the effect produced. If but one-tenth of our endeavour succeeds we may consider our object gained.

"Only sympathetic Mussalmans should read this."

Possibly many Mussalmans with short memories will be amazed at what we say and ask us, what is our malady? Alas! That would be something provoking and insinuating which we are not disposed to put up with time after time. But today the world has bound the Mussalmans in chains and it is feared that, if this state of affairs should tend to develop, European materialism and liberty will extend to our lives with the necessary consequences of jealousy and rebellion. Do we not see the chaos created in the world by modern weapons? And yet Mussalmans are blamed for not having invented any new weapon in the scientific world! Great God! They (Mussalmans) pride themselves upon the fact that they have not produced calamity and revolt in the world and that they have established fewer munition factories than musjids and serais.

Still in spite of all this foresight, the question why Islam is not progressing remains unanswered. Men have forgotten the cause of the weakness of Màmum's Khalifate. Ah me! Does any one know why the memory of Mustasimbilla has been effaced?

Saâdi's spirit still mourns over it.
"Heaven would be justified if it were to rain blood upon the earth.
"Over the fall of the Commander of the Faithful, King Mustàsim."

The lesson of the decline of Granada, Spain and Cordova is writ large. Those forms are no more and even a trace of them cannot be found. And why? The reason is not political, economical or educational. Islamic administration competed successfully with the intricate principles of Roman rule. Muslim political economy was successful beyond the dreams of avarice, while our education elevated the Greek and the Roman.

Remember! One reason of this decline and weakness is a corrupt civilization. We have forsaken the simple principles and plain path of Islam and changed our manner of living. In our own opinion we are Mussalmans, but no ene else would regard us as such. We were commanded to preach the Faith, but we have substituted pleasure for it; we have abandoned masjids and monasteries, we have toned down the glittering light of spiritual reform that dazzled our sight, by putting on European glasses, and the ideas that were transmitted from tongues of flame to the fingers were buried alive in the labyrinth of research and scientific investigation and experiment. Still, our salvation is in our hands, and Europe will regard our appeal for peace with very great appreciation.

22. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 26th August, writes:—Under no power are there so many Mussalmans as there are under the British Government, and it is certain that the subjects of no Government enjoy the religious liberty and privilege accorded to Mussalmans under British rule. Religious freedom is such a blessing that gratitude, however great, can never repay the debt we owe the Government. In matters concerning the religions of the people there is no interference shown to any, and one can perform one's religious duties without let or hindrance. Thousands of Missionaries from Europe and America are allowed to preach their religion in this country and enjoy equal rights with Hindus and Mussalmans.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 26th, 1916.

The Holy Places and the British Government.

Sadik writes on the authority of a work entitled "Arya Dharm":—"It will be observed that Muhammadans alone can realise to the full the freedom of promulgating their religion, and it is their own fault if they intentionally refrain from taking advantage of the opportunity thus afforded."

Nor is this all, when war broke out with the Turks in November 1914, Great Britain having regard to the religious feelings of her Mussalman subjects issued, with the concurrence of the Allies a proclamation that Holy Places of the Mussalmans would be secure from the effects of the present war.

Germany, on the contrary, gave a false assurance of her concern for the welware of the Mussalmans and caught Turkey in her deceitful snare.

She is so very fanatical that she tried to exterminate the Muhammadans in East Africa preventing them from performing the rite of circumcision—a fact to which General Smuts bears testimony.

Recently the British Government issued, for the information of British Colonies, a proclamation to the effect that the Arabs tired of long years of Turkish misrule were watching for a suitable opportunity to declare their independence.

There is no doubt Great Britain has been very sympathetic towards the Arabs. But as Turkey has joined the central powers Great Britain has taken the opportunity of expressing its sympathy with these Arabs who have sided with the Allies against the common foe.

Non-interference in religious matters is the established policy of Great Britain, and she has left no stone unturned to save the Holy Places of Islam from the hands of the oppressor. The main object of British policy is that the Holy Places should remain under an independent Muhammadan ruler.

The present war had placed many difficulties and hardships in the way of the pilgrimage to Hedjaz, but through the action of the Sharif of Mecca it is hoped that arrangements will be made for pilgrims to travel in safety to the Holy Places.

23. The Mushir-i-Dakhan, of the 27th August, in a leader on the marginally-noted subject, writes:—It is well known that the Kaiser of Germany has been boastful and selfish from his boyhood. The odious war policy which he has adopted during the last part of his life is due to his conceit and selfishness, and consequently for the last two years he has involved the world in anxiety and himself in embarrassment. The war brought about by the Kaiser of Germany is proving a dreadful calamity to man. Owing to this, every part of the world is presenting him with wreaths of curses, and it is on this account he felt it necessary to address his forces at the Somme-front in words which are false and deceptive.

MUSHIR-I-DAKHAN, Hyderabad, Aug. 27th, 1916.

"A cowardly attack by the Kaiser of Germany on the peaceful noble English nation."

It should be impressed upon our readers that there is no one in the world who tells more lies than the Kaiser.

The world admits that the Kaiser's attack was cowardly because of the sympathies of the British nation towards men and the support it readily gives to the oppressed. Every sensible man should consider it his duty to appreciate the British sympathy, and to express his abhorrence at the Kaiser's falsehood. He should take advantage of every opportunity of supporting truth and helping the nation with moral and material aid.

II.—Home Administration.

(e) Local and Municipal.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1916.

A conference of the heads of local bodies.

24. The Swadesamitran, of the 25th August, writes:—It appears the District Collector of Dacca convened a conference of the chairmen of the several unions in the district on Wednesday last. If officials convene conferences of non-officials like this, many public grievances will be brought to light. Though such conferences are not held in this Presidency, conferences in which both the officials and non-officials take part are being held now and then in Bengal, Bombay and other Provinces. In Bengal a conference called the Commissioner's conference is being held and this is attended not only by the Members of the Revenue Board and the Secretaries to Government but also by non-officials like Members of Legislative Councils, whenever the opinion of the latter has to be ascertained regarding any subject under discussion. The Decentralisation Commission recommended the extension of this system to other Provinces also, and suggested that in addition to a conference for the whole Province, there should be a conference for each district. But the conference held at Dacca is better than all these. We wish this system of holding a conference of the heads of local self-governing institutions is adopted in this Presidency. It should be admitted that much less interest is shown in the matter of improving local bodies in this Presidency than in other Presidencies. Here the supervision of these local bodies is left in the hands of the Indian Member of Council and therefore one would expect them to progress very fast, though, as a matter of fact, it is not so. Why should not Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar hold a conference of the heads of local bodies! If he takes the lead by holding a provincial conference like this, it will be an impetus to District officials to hold such conferences in their districts.

Reserved compartments.

25. The Andhrapatrika, of the 24th August, says:—The sooner the practice of reserving compartments for Europeans and Eurasians is done away with, the better for public peace. Whatever might be the reasons for it in the past, there is no reason now to perpetuate the practice. A Eurasian pays the same fare as an Indian, and it is unjust that he should occupy a whole compartment to the exclusion of any Indian. This exclusive privilege is a source of heart-burning to the Indian third-class passenger, who suffers great hardship for want of room in trains. The Indian passengers have waited for long for a redress, but were disappointed. Hence the petty disturbances of peace that now take place here and there. We hope that the rulers will note this and do justice to the Indian travelling public.

Bharathi, Bellary, Aug. 25th, 1916.

Third-class passengers by railway.

26. The Bharathi, of the 25th August, in a leading article dwells on the inconveniences suffered by third-class passengers by railway, particularly on account of the overcrowding of compartments and the absence of adequate regulation of traffic. The paper says that the discomfort felt by passengers is so great that it has created among the public a strong aversion to journey by railway and that the representations of the public and the press have so far been a cry in the wilderness, the railway authorities giving no heed to them whatever. Let us see, the paper adds, how long these grievances will continue! Is this not an excellent illustration of the fact that we must always be suffering from some kind of grievance or other?

Thefts in female compartments.

27. The Manorama, of the 25th August, draws attention to the growth of running train thefts, especially in female compartments, and suggests as a remedy that the planks, attached to carriages reserved for women, should be removed, and that the police should pay more attention to their duties.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 25th, 1916.

The railway gate at Calicut.

28. The Manorama, of the 29th August, again dwells upon the inconvenience to the people, resulting from the closing of the road, leading from the Calicut railway station to Tali, Chalapram, Mankavu and other places, points out that, owing to the absence of a board at the gate to indicate the closing thereof, several innocent persons pass through it and become liable to be prosecuted for trespass, and that the Railway authorities, who treat third-class passengers as if they were mere cattle without tails, are not likely to do anything in the matter, and hopes that the District Magistrate will inspect the place and do the needful in the matter. The paper also invites the special attention of the Congress Committee at Calicut to the matter.

Report of the Public Services Commission.

29. Referring to the decision of the British Government to publish this report shortly, the Swadesamitran, of the 24th August, says:—When, soon after the report was ready, news was received that the Government was not for publishing it, the people did not care much about it, as they were sure that great changes were bound to occur in the condition of India, when the British Empire was reconstituted after the end of the war. We do not know why the Government, which did not want to publish this report during the pendency of the war, has changed its mind so soon. We see no other difference in the conditions which existed at the time when the Government thought it wise not to publish the report and those which exist now, than that Lord Crewe was the Secretary of State and Lord Hardinge was the Viceroy then, while Mr. Chamberlain is the Secretary of State and Lord Chelmsford is the Viceroy now. It is clear from the official communiquè issued by the Government of India that, though the aims of the Indians may not be accomplished in full, they will be given a larger number of appointments. This would not have satisfied the Indians even before the war. As observed by the Bombay Chronicle, it cannot give any satisfaction to the Indians now when they expect India to be raised to the level of the colonies. It may only serve as an argument to satisfy the British public that numerous benefits have been conferred upon the Indians. Anticipating, perhaps, the discontent of the Indians even in the number of appointments that may be given to them as a result of the recommendation in the report, the Madras Mail appeases the Indians by saying that, as there are only about 6,000 high appointments in India which can be held by the Indians and the number of those wishing to have them is gradually increasing, it may not be possible for all of them to be satisfied and that therefore they would do well to confine their activities to the Legislative Council. It says that the argument in favour of increasing the representative element applies with greater force to the Legislative than to the Executive Councils. This is a curious argument indeed. If we demand that the Legislative Councils should be made entirely representative, they say that our political advancement would tell upon the strength of the administration. If we demand that a larger number of administrative posts should be conferred on us, they ask us to turn our attention to political advancement and to increase of our powers in the Legislative Council. What are we to do? How can the efficiency of the administration be impaired by giving us a larger number of appointments? Where is the proof for the fact that we are wanting in administrative efficiency? The majority of the witnesses examined by the Public Services Commission bore testimony to the fact that Indians were as efficient as Europeans in the matter of administration. So we are justified in demanding that a larger number of the higher appointments should be given to us. There is also a gain to the Government by employing us largely, for we need not be paid as much as is paid to Europeans. The Government will also save the large amount of money that is now being spent on account of salaries and pensions having to be paid to a number of officials in England. So it is as necessary that the higher appointments in India should be given to Indians as it is that they should be given larger powers in the Legislative Councils. But we are afraid that the report of the Public Services Commission will not fully satisfy the aspirations of the Indians. The few advantages the Indians may derive from the report of this Commission will not make them forget the high ideal before them to be achieved after the end of the war. If the Government of India and the Secretary of State for India should think so, they are bound to be disappointed.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1916.

The Prapanchamitran, of the 25th August, reproduces the above article.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Aug. 25th, 1916.

Report of the Public Services Commission.

Referring to the immediate publication of the report of the "Public Services Commission", the Yogakshemam, of the 25th August, observes that it is at a loss to know what to say about the policy of the Secretary of State, who has decided to publish the report at this juncture, when hot discussions about self-government are going on in all parts of the country.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Aug. 28th, 1916.

Report of the Public Services Commission.

In rejoicing at the decision of the Secretary of State to publish immediately the report of the "Public Services Commission", which, according to it, should not have been withheld till now, the Lokaprakasam, of the 28th August, points out that the Commission must have recommended the removal of the obstacles in the way of Indians being admitted to high posts in departments like the Police, Education and Engineering, and that the Government's original decision not to publish the report till the war was over must have been due to this, and observes that, though there may not be any material changes in the Civil Service Examination and though Simultaneous Examination may not be held in India, the present decision gives room for hope.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Aug. 29th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Keralodayam, of the 29th August, points out that the Government are mistaken, if they think that the report contains nothing which the Indians will take exception to, and prays to them not to view the reasonable criticisms of Indians as seditious, because the present is still a time of war.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1916.

Charitable endowments.

30. Referring to a recent order of the Government of Madras regarding the management of charitable endowments, the Hindu Nesan, of the 24th August, observes:—The tenor of the order clearly shows that the Government has acted on the recommendations of only the Revenue Board in this matter, ignoring altogether those of the Pilgrims' Committee. In the face of the statement of this committee that the existing law relating to charitable endowments is unsuitable to the present time, the Government is hesitating to change the law and tries to pull on by making trifling modifications therein. It proposes to vest the supervision of the charitable endowments with officials like Deputy Collectors and Tahsildars, and it is unnecessarily afraid of constituting local committees to supervise these endowments and giving them legal powers for the purpose.

31. Adverting to a speech said to have been delivered by Lord Carmichael at Dacca last Wednesday regarding the present situation in Bengal, the Swadesamitran, of the 25th August, says:—Our readers are aware that the papers insisted on those who are interned being informed of the offence committed by them and being given an opportunity to explain the charges brought against them. Lord Carmichael's reply to this point is ingenious. He says that this is being done now, though it was not done before. What is meant by now? Is it after the defect was pointed out by the papers or before it? The fact that no date has been mentioned by Lord Carmichael clearly shows that his Government is acting only on the suggestion of the papers, but that he hesitates to admit it. Lord Carmichael says that in every case where a man is interned the order is passed only after a competent high official who, by his position, is eligible to act as a High Court Judge, has examined all that the Police have to say and has pronounced an opinion that the man can be interned. As he has not stated how many men, who were suspected by the Police, were recommended to be let off by this official, we have to presume that a large number of persons have been interned, relying solely on the information of the Police. It may be said that the Police are themselves very careful in these cases. But Lord Carmichael himself admits that the persons on whose evidence the Police take action are the ordinary informants and those already interned, and we cannot rely much upon the veracity of these people. Then, again, how can the victims in these cases refute the evidence collected against them, if they do not know the witnesses who gave such evidence? We do not say that all the people now interned are innocent men Many of them may be really bad people. But some of them may also be innocent and the criticism that it is not a humane act to intern these, relying only on the evidence gathered by the Police, has not been met by Lord Carmichael. This is what we want to point out here.

An order that one should not leave a certain place is almost the same in principle as an order that one should not enter a place. So the order of the Bombay Government preventing Mrs. Besant from entering that Presidency is not different from an order of internment. But the Bombay Government does not seem to have taken the same precaution before passing this order as the Bengal Government is said to be taking. It is really strange that in India there is no uniformity in the systems followed in different parts of the country in any matter.

Lord Carmichael on the present situation in Bengal.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1916.

32. The Hindu Nesan, of the 25th August, is surprised at the resolution passed by the Lucknow Reception Committee that Mrs. Besant should be the President of the Congress this year, and taking exception to her letter to the Reception Committee on this resolution, in which she claims the right of presiding over this Congress, criticises the action of the Reception Committee and the attempt of Mrs. Besant to create difficulties in the election of the president at the eleventh hour, and says that this committee has no justification whatever in departing this year from the usual procedure of electing as President one who is voted for by the majority of the Provincial Congress Committees.

The Congress Presidentship.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1916.

33. Referring to the statement of Mrs. Besant that she is specially qualified for the presidentship of the next congress, because she is not in the good graces of the Government, the Kerala Patrika, of the 26th August, says:—We are not prepared to deny that there are some people in these parts who think that this is a special qualification. The fact that they follow Mrs. Besant shows that their brains have been somewhat injuriously affected by the present system of education. She first tried to become the chief guru of the Hindus, and, as she failed in that attempt, she is now trying to start a "Home Rule League" and be its president. She thinks that this object of hers can be easily achieved, if she becomes the president of the congress. We cannot now say in what character she will appear next. We trust that our countrymen are too wise to be misled by such tricks.

TAMILIAN, Madras, Aug. 16th, 1916.

The Indian Buddhists and Home Rule.

34. In a leader under this heading, the * Tamilian, of the 16th August, dwells upon the peace the country enjoyed when it was under the rule of the Dravidians, the several hardships to which these Dravidians were subjected under the rule of the Aryans, the benign rule of Asoka and other Buddhist kings who put an end to the high-handed acts of the Aryans and secured the happiness of the Dravidians and the advent of the British, who restored peace and order in the country and have been conferring numerous benefits on the Dravidians, and warns the Buddhists from lending their ears to the cry of "Home Rule" raised throughout the country by a few.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakotta, Aug. 21st, 1916.

The enquiry of the Pilgrims' Committee.

35. Referring to the report of this committee, the * Vaisyamitran, of the 21st August, writes:—There are four directions in which the convenience of the pilgrims has to be secured. The first is in connection with their travel, the second refers to their accommodation during their stay at different places, the third relates to sanitary arrangements in sacred places and the fourth to the supply of food and drink for the pilgrims at these places. The report of the committee clearly shows that the members of it did not bestow sufficient attention to these four points in their enquiry. Taking the first point of facilities of travelling for the pilgrims, the hardships suffered by third-class passengers travelling by the South Indian Railway on account of overcrowding even on ordinary occasions are too well known to require a narration again and the condition becomes worse on festive occasions. Though it cannot be gainsaid that the facilities for passengers on this railway have been slightly improved within the last ten years, it has not been possible for the company to cope with the increased traffic, on account of its not having bestowed any attention to the matter of increasing its rolling stock. The committee says that this Railway Company understands its work well enough, and that it has either already solved or is trying to solve the problem of overcrowding on festive occasions. We do not require a special committee to say that the Railway Company understands its work well enough. It is because it understands its work that it is averse to increasing its rolling stock. Another observation of the committee cannot but pain the minds of the people, and it is that people, who are accustomed to wander in the open, are not justified in expecting the Railway Company to provide a long covered platform for them at every station. We cannot understand the meaning of the statement of the committee that pilgrims are accustomed to wander in the sun and rain. In certain big stations, tickets are issued only a few minutes before the arrival of the train, though the rule is that this should be done throughout the day and in many stations the passengers are allowed to get into the platform only by a single gate and that one by one. This naturally leads to much confusion among the passengers and with the disinclination of the passengers in the already overcrowded train to allow new comers into it and the hurry of the new comers to get into the train, there is nothing surprising in the passengers in interim stations being inconvenienced a great deal. One remedy for this is to issue tickets sufficiently early and to allow passengers to get into the platform in time to arrange themselves calmly to get into the train. No doubt this will mean some additional trouble to the Railway servants. But they should not mind this in the interests of the third-class passengers who contribute the main portion of the income of this company.

There has been a longstanding complaint that the sweetmeats sold in the Indian refreshment rooms in different stations are the worst that could be had for the money, and the Railway Company does not bestow any attention to the matter of putting up big sheds for passengers to stay in stations on festive occasions. It appears that the people who went to the recent Kumbabhishekam at Tiruvadaimarudur had to stay under the banian trees near the station for want of a shed, and that even here they were driven away by the Police. The committee has not at all made mention of these grievances.

Mr. Tilak and the Government.

36. The Vaisyamitran,* of the 21st August, says that the motive for the action of the Bombay Government in having demanded security for good behaviour from Mr. Tilak is evidently to prevent him from striving for Home Rule for India, as there is no seditious passage in the several speeches delivered by him and adds that the action of the same Government in having prevented Mrs. Besant from entering the Bombay Presidency and that of the Madras Government in having demanded security from her as the editor of New India clearly show the attitude of these two Provincial Governments in the matter of India acquiring swaraj.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakottai, Aug. 21st, 1916.

New India and the Government.

37. Referring to the reply of Mr. Austen Chamberlain in the House of Commons to Mr. Snowden, that he was not aware of the public feeling in India having been roused by the action of the Madras Government in the case of New India, the Prapanchamitran, of the 25th August, observes:—We cannot rely upon the English papers to give the British public a correct idea of the public feeling in this country regarding any subject, especially when it is adverse to the Government. The only channel through which the Secretary of State can have information about the public opinion here on any matter is the Government of India and the reply of Mr. Chamberlain shows that the Government of India has not acquainted him with the public feeling in India regarding the action of the Government in the case of New India. We have full confidence in the English rule and we certainly believe that we can advance under this rule. But we regret very much that the English people have no opportunity of knowing our ideas and aspirations. Though the public feeling in this country is now at a very high tension the Government of India has not apprised England of this fact. If this tension increases and undesirable events occur, which, we hope, will never be, will it not be a mistake on the part of the Government of India not to have taken the precaution of acquainting England with the condition of this country? How can the Secretary of State for India be of any use to us, if he has no correct idea of our opinion? When we heard that he had ceased to be a subscriber to New India, we knew that he hated it. So we are not surprised at his present statement. If one has the will to know things, there is always a way.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1916.

The Swadesamitran, of the 29th August, quotes the order of the Madras Government informing Mrs. Besant that she has forfeited the security of Rs. 2,000 deposited by her on account of certain articles which appeared in New India, and remarks:—We have read through the articles pointed out by the Government, and there is no doubt that the subjects dealt with in them are of a general nature. Every one will have to admit that there is nothing wrong in commenting upon such subjects in any paper and other papers than New India have done so. So it is clear that what the Government has taken exception to in these articles in New India is not the subjects discussed therein, but the tone and language. Therefore the only point to be considered now is whether the tone and language of these articles are such as to bring them within section 4 (1) of the Press Act of 1910. It has been observed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, the late Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court, that the wording of this section of the Press Act was so wide as to bring within its scope any kind of article. He has also pointed out the arbitrary nature of the powers enjoyed by the Government under this Act. Though the Government has unlimited powers under this Act, it is bound to exercise them only in the interests of the public and therefore the point to be considered now is whether the Government has exercised its powers over New India only in the interests of the public. As we have already observed, New India might have used violent language on several occasions, and it is a fact that many of the sympathisers of this paper have often felt that it would do well to tone this down. But we do not think that there is, on this account, any

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1916.

* Received in the current week.

necessity for bringing about the cessation of this paper by enforcing the Press Act against it. At the time when the Press Act was passed, the Government clearly stated that it was intended only to prevent the occurrence of anything which was likely to endanger the public safety and the peace of the country and not to punish offences. It was only on the 4th instant that His Excellency Lord Pentland paid a tribute in the Legislative Council to the loyalty of the people of this Province and the readiness with which they came forward to help the Government during the last two years the war has been going on. The majority of the articles in New India, to which the Government has now taken exception, appeared only during this period and they have not ruffled the loyalty of the people or the peace of the country in any way. Then how can the Government be justified in taking action against New India in the interests of the public two or three weeks after this? It is clear from the statement of Lord Pentland himself that the strong articles of Mrs. Besant have not shaken the loyalty of the people in any way, and we would impress on the Government the fact that its present action at a time when the Presidency is enjoying perfect peace will cause pain to the public. It is possible even now for the Government to consult the popular representatives and undo what has been done. We would confidently assert that, if the Government will do so, its action will be appreciated throughout the Presidency.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 26th, 1916.

A suggestion to the members of the Legislative Council.

38. The Swadesamitran, of the 26th August, writes:—The Legislative Councils in India should have the same powers in conducting the Indian administration as the British Parliament has in conducting the administration of the British Empire. One privilege enjoyed by the Members of the British Parliament is to present to the House a petition on any subject from their constituents. This privilege is not enjoyed by the Legislative Councils in India. We hope the elected members of these councils will attend to this matter, and see that the rules regulating the work of the councils are so modified as to make it possible for them to present petitions on behalf of the public and discuss them in the Councils.

VIDYABHANU, Konapet, Aug. 28th, 1916.

District Darbars.

39. The Vidyabhanu, of the 28th August, welcomes the action of the Government of the United Provinces in having accepted the resolution brought forward in the Legislative Council of that Province by the Hon'ble Mr. Kelkar that District officials, when touring through the districts, should hold Darbars in each important town of the districts, in which non-official representatives of the people may be allowed to put questions to the officials concerning the wants of the districts, and that they should move freely with the people, and suggests that this system can be followed with advantage in this Presidency also.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1916.

Labour law.

40. The Andhraprakasika, of the 23rd August, says:—The Social Service League requested the Government of Ceylon to relax the provisions of the Ceylon Labour Law. They replied that if they should do so, it would be difficult to maintain discipline among labourers. Coolies go to Colonies, leaving behind them their kith and kin, and pawning their bodies in the hope of getting a living there. It is certainly cruel to treat such men mercilessly. We hope that the Ceylon Government will follow the example of the Governments of Fiji and certain other Colonies and relax their Labour law.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Aug. 23rd, 1916.

Anantapur District Conference.

41. In commenting on the proceedings of the Anantapur District Conference, the Andhraprakasika, of the 23rd August, says:—All the resolutions of the Honourable Members in the Legislative Councils are treated as so many cries in the wilderness. The Government have all arbitrary powers vested in them and so the Honourable Members could not effect reforms as desired by the people. As stated by the President, this state of things cannot be set right until the Honourable non-official members form the majority in these Councils. The people are growing more and more despondent in this matter, and it will be well if the rulers nip such despondency in the bud. The administration of the Local Boards being at present unsatisfactory for want of funds, we submit that the Government will, following the suggestion of the President of the Conference, assign the Abkāri revenue to the Local Boards and enable them to carry out, with its help, reforms such as the free and compulsory education of the poor and the improvement of village sanitation.

42. Referring to the double company of Bengali Infantry that is soon to be formed, the Andhrapatrika, of the 24th August, says:—Had steps been taken at the very beginning of the war to form an Indian army, Indians would have come forward by lakhs, overthrown the German soldiers, and terminated the war by this time. We hope that Lord Chelmsford will place in the Indians the same confidence as in the people of the English Colonies, and use them in the defence of the Empire.

A Bengali army.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1916.

43. In commenting on the speech made by Lord Carmichael at a Darbar at Dacca, the Andhrapatrika, of the 25th August, says:—His Excellency said that no person was interned unless and until what the police had to say against him was referred to an officer who by his position was eligible to act as a High Court Judge, and his opinion was taken. We suggest that in matters of this kind a High Court Judge is to be preferred to one who is eligible to act as a High Court Judge, for the former will give a more independent opinion. We also suggest that the explanation of the accused may be forwarded to the enquiring officer for his consideration. While feeling grateful to His Excellency for his liberal attitude in this matter, we fear that so long as the police exclusively exercise the power of pitching upon offenders, there is every likelihood that the power may be abused and innocent persons who are not in the good graces of the police, declared guilty. Lord Carmichael said that though the Defence of India Act was a war measure, yet it was passed avowedly to deal with the situation in Bengal, which was dangerous in times of peace, and still more so in war times. The Regulation of 1818 also is put into force. What can be done when even a liberal-minded Governor like Lord Carmichael is of opinion that repressive measures are now found necessary? It is enough if he helps to have them repealed after the war is over.

Lord Carmichael's liberal utterances.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1916.

44. The Andhrapatrika, of the 25th August, says:—The British Government gave an order to Messrs Ralli Brothers to purchase, at Calcutta for the mills at Dundee, 4,00,000 jute bales. By this contract, the firm of Messrs. Ralli Brothers will profit largely, but it is a Greek firm and not a British firm. Greece has not helped the Allies in the present war, but has remained neutral. It is not, therefore, right that that firm should make a big profit out of this concern. British merchants should note this and see that an Indian or Anglo-Indian firm replaces the above firm. With this war should end the British partiality for Europe. The British should first safeguard their own interests and the interests of the Indians and then look to the interests of the other nations.

Export of jute.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 25th, 1916.

45. The Andhrapatrika, of the 25th August, says:—A correspondent to the Capital says that the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nayar is not energetic in his work, and that he is slower than the coffin-horses. The comparison is, perhaps, suited to the British taste, but is unpalatable to us. Sir Sankaran Nayar is a man of great independence and his very presence in the Viceregal Executive Council is a source of great strength to the Indians, who expect that he will play an active part on their behalf in the final settlement after the war.

The Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nayar.

The Oriental Manuscripts Library.

46. In commenting on the report on the Oriental Manuscript Library for the three years ending with 1915–16, the Andhraputrika, of the 26th August, says:—The library is now located in an insignificant corner of the Museum buildings and does not attract the eye of the public. To make it attractive it was proposed that a board drawing the attention of the public to it should be hung up, and that the library room should be fitted with electric fans. But the Government have rejected both these proposals on the ground that the library is soon to form part of the University library and so it will be a waste of money to supply it with electric fittings for the temporary period it is going to be at the museum. But it will take not less than two years to finish the construction of the University Library Buildings even if it is begun to-day, and the cost of electric fittings in the present Oriental Manuscripts Library building for the temporary period will be an infinitesimal fraction of the cost incurred by the Government in going up the hills during the summer. We hope that the Government will reconsider the matter and make the library comfortable to the public in every way.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1916.

The Congress.

47. In its leader on the forthcoming session of the congress, the Andhrapatrika, of the 29th August, writes:—In the eyes of the Reception Committee, Mr. Mozumdar is not competent to discharge the duties of a President of the Congress. It is true that the All-India Congress Committee can appoint any person it chooses as President, but it has to appoint one who can place before the congress Indian opinion in an emphatic way and indicate the place which India should occupy in the reconstruction of the empire after the war. We are of opinion that Mr. Mazrul Haque will be the best man in every way to occupy the office of President. He is the foremost of Muhammadan leaders, and an advocate of Home Rule. He is a man of great talents and can harmonise the Muhammadan and the Hindu interests. If he is not elected, we suggest the name of Sir Ali Imam.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 29th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

48. The Andhrapatrika, of the 29th August, says:—The following was ready for the press a few days ago. " . . . . We are made to understand that the Government of Madras contemplate to have recourse to some repressive steps in this Presidency. This Presidency is a peaceful one and so are its people. Lord Pentland is noted for his peaceful rule. The Hon'ble Sir Harold Stuart has earned a name for his kindness to even confirmed criminals and the Hon'ble Mr. Cardew for his magnanimity. The Hon'ble Sir Sivaswami Ayyar is our countryman. Under their government this Presidency has been enjoying peace. But by demanding security from Mrs. Besant the Government have now given rise to agitation. We pray that Lord Pentland and his colleagues will pursue a liberal policy and maintain the reputation that in India the people of Madras and their rulers are, as far as it lies in their power, harmoniously working for the advancement of the country". But as the information that reached us then was only a rumour, we thought it wise to wait before publishing the above. While we had been awaiting further information, we learned that the security paid by New India was forfeited to Government. We regret it very much. It is deplorable that the rulers have in this Province also resorted to repressive measures. We trust that Lord Pentland will take into his consideration our prayer in the above article.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 23rd, 1916.

Japan and England.

49. In dwelling on the Anglo-Japanese treaty, the Desamata, of the 23rd August, gives the following as the view of a certain paper published in Tokio:—"The present European war makes it plain that Japan and England have no common interests. Japan stands for loyalty and justice, Germany for loyalty and injustice, and England for selfishness and injustice. Our country cannot maintain treaty obligations with such a country as England." The paper says that there are many other Japanese papers opposed to the treaty relations, and suggests that the British should nip such an attitude in the bud and strengthen the alliance between England and Japan.

50. The Andhrachandrika, of the 24th August, has the following note:— Certain students in Madras have met under the presidency of the Hon'ble Mr. Pittendrigh, and boycotted the Madras Mail.

The Madras Mail.

ANDHRACHANDRIKA, Proddatur, Aug. 24th, 1916.

51. In commenting on the fact that the East African Government have issued an order directing that every Indian immigrating into East Africa should deposit Rs. 50 before entering it, the Desamata, of the 23rd August, remarks:— Hitherto this deposit was taken only after the Indian cooly had entered the country. But now it is to be collected before his entry. Though many British statesmen and British organs of public opinion have raised in us the hope that the Indian administration will undergo, after the war, a change for the better, the above order of the East African Government makes us despondent and confirms us in our suspicion that no such change will ever come about. If after the war the African question does not receive a satisfactory solution, and the administration of India does not change favourably for the Indians, we fear that the relations between the British and the Indians will be strained, giving room for many troubles and endangering the stability of the Empire.

The East Africa.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 23rd, 1916.

52. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 26th August, writes:—A correspondent writes to us deploring the sentence passed against Mr. Tilak. Mr. Tilak intends to appeal against the Magistrate's order and there is a chance of its being reversed. Granting that it is upheld, where is the harm? Are there not millions of others who have faced even greater troubles for the good of society? Does the crucifixion of Christ detract from his merit? The soul and its reputation cannot suffer as the country does. Mr. Tilak himself, the king of ascetics, is not grieved. Why should others feel sorry then? This is how some people view the situation. Our own belief is that these worldly troubles come only for the good of these great men.

The Tilak case.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 26th, 1916.

53. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 25th August, in a leading article, observes that while India has failed to obtain the right of representation at the Paris Economic Conference, her hopes of the future must be considered as mere castles in the air. The paper next remarks that although India served the Empire, not because she expected any profit to herself in return for those services, but because she identified her interests with those of the Empire, of which she considered herself a vital limb, it is natural that she should resent the attitude of England in failing to reciprocate that feeling. The paper next dwells on the history of the Rhodes scholarships and observes that Mr. Asquith's reply in regard to the proposal to grant to Indians the scholarships hitherto assigned to German students is hardly consistent with the status of equality insisted upon by the Indians as citizens of the British Empire.

India and the empire.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 25th, 1916.

54. A contributor to the Swadeshabhimani, of the 25th August, complains that the Vinayaka Chathurthi festival is made the occasion for extensive gambling with cocoanuts under the pretence of religious sanction, and that bets staking money in the game can hardly be considered as mere holiday sport.

Gambling on the occasion of the Vinayaka Chathurthi festival.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 25th, 1916.

55. A correspondent of the Swadeshabhimani, of the 25th August, writes:— It is rumoured that Amunaje, Kariyangala and two other villages belonging to Malali Magane of the Mangalore taluk which were under the jurisdiction of the District Registrar will now be transferred to the Bantwal Sub-Registrar's office. It is, perhaps, believed that this change will add to the convenience of the residents of the villages as they are nearer to Bantwal than Mangalore by about 5 miles. But the truth is otherwise. For, the Pulani river which runs along these four villages makes it very convenient to travel to Mangalore by boat; and, during the summer too, when Changes in registration districts in South Canara.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Aug. 25th, 1916.

the river dries up, there is a high road within 3 miles of these villages convenient for journey by cart, while the journey to Bantwal, though it is only 7 miles, has to be done on foot and the route by cart or boat is 28 miles, that is four times as long. In view, therefore, of the extreme inconvenience which would be caused, particularly to sick and infirm parties who may have to proceed to the registration office, it is hoped that the proposal to transfer these villages to Bantwal may be deferred at least until the new Bantwal-Gurpur Road is constructed.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Aug. 26th, 1916.

Sir Rabindra Nath Tagore in Japan.

56. Referring to Sir Rabindra Nath Tagore's fame and popularity as a man of literature, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 26th August, writes:—On going to Japan Sir Rabindra Nath in the course of interviews with some leading Japanese citizens was asked about the nature of western civilization and his replies thereto are most astounding. Sir Rabindra Nath observed that the civilization of the west is confined to material advancement and is devoid of the spiritual knowledge which enriches the value of material prosperity. The Japanese were much amazed to hear those words. When we see how the western nations are engaged in fighting like beasts for gold and territory and how myriads have been slaughtered, we can hardly credit them with any culture. Though the world is wide enough for all to live together happily, the western nations have been seized with the wicked desire of wiping out the rest for their own aggrandisement. This wickedness is seen to be plentifully bearing fruit at present. It is the duty of peaceable people to root out this poisonous tree. Sir Rabindra Nath has pointed out how it behoves the eastern countries like Japan to step in and that just as the ignorance of one member of a family is a source of distress to all the rest, those who are seized with the greed of wealth and land, are a source of danger to the whole world. This is doubtless a just view. But Japan, too, like the westerns, is hankering after material greatness to the detriment of spiritual good. The belief is growing in Japan that all greatness depends on the exertions of man and that it is foolish to put faith in Providence. Sir Rabindra Nath Tagore's visit to Japan at this moment must, therefore, be considered very opportune, as he will doubtless succeed in removing these materialistic tendencies from the minds of the Japanese people.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Aug. 23rd, 1916.

The Hardinge Commission.

57. In a note the Kerala Sanchari, of the 23rd August, writes:—The "Hardinge Commission" are said to have observed in their report that the British Parliament does not pay adequate attention to Irish affairs. What about those of India?

MANORAMA, Calicut, Aug. 25th, 1916.

Is this just, if true?

58. Referring to the order of the President of a Taluk Board to the effect that students should not get down newspapers in their names, the Manorama, of the 25th August, says:—When students read newspapers their knowledge of the world necessarily increases. We think that the Government know well that the Malayalam papers contain nothing which is antagonistic to them. Such being the case, we cannot understand what may be the motive of the President in issuing such an order.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Aug. 26th, 1916.

The Bishop of Madras and Home Rule for India.

59. Referring to the article of the Bishop of Madras in the Nineteenth Century and After, the Kerala Patrika, of the 26th August, endorses his opinions, which are in agreement with those of the Congress leaders and others, points out that they may not be quite palatable either to Anglo-Indian officials or to the followers of Mrs. Besant, and rejoices that a great Missionary should have come forward to place before the English public the real state of affairs in India.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Aug. 26th, 1916.

The Secretary of State's ignorance of Indian affairs.

60. The Kerala Patrika, of the 26th August, regrets that in his reply to a question in Parliament regarding New India security case, the Secretary of State should have no information on important events taking place in India, and observes that as Members of Parliament can obtain information about India only through the Secretary of State, it may be concluded that, if the latter has no information on any subject, the former too possess none.

The Indian coolies in Ceylon.

61. Referring to a letter, which appears in another part of it, dwelling upon the hardships of the Indian coolies in Ceylon, the Kerala Patrika, of the 26th August, doubts whether the letter in question has mentioned all their grievances, draws special attention to the tricks of the recruiting agents, and hopes that the Government will do the needful in the matter.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Aug. 26th, 1916.

A new harbour.

62. The Satiyanadam, of the 25th August, points out that the decision of the Government to improve the port of Tuticorin is to be attributed to the influence of the Madras merchants, who from the very commencement were dead against the Cochin harbour scheme. The paper adds that, if this settlement be only a provincial one, it may reasonably be hoped that the Imperial Government will consider the advisability of improving the Cochin harbour.

SATIYANADAM, Ernakulam, Aug. 25th, 1916.

"The state of our house."

63. The Qaumi Report, of the 22nd August, in a leader on the marginally-noted subject, writes:—The distracted state of Europe has made our house also desolate. Our compatriots are restless and have made Home Rule a burning question. Mussalmans have no knowledge as to what is being demanded in their name or what they are likely to get. Loyalty does not consist in lulling the community to sleep and filling their heads with soothing ideas. Home Rule is a political power and to mention it in the presence of Mussalmans is enough to make them mad. But the question is this, "Can this Home Rule be a remedy for our disease? Are we dying for political power? We know "we are emphatically not"! Mussalmans are now dying for Spiritual power. Whatever the political power they have already is too much for them. What status has European education given to Mussalmans? The answer is they will find God through Home Rule. Supposing three or four Judges are added and forty or fifty additional dafadars entertained; would this be a sufficient political progress for us? How can the nation which ruled till yesterday, whose traces are still extant which is still alive, be satisfied with a favour like Home Rule? The nation that believes in the certainty of reward and punishment in the future state, cannot make the world its goal. Our aim is much higher and loftier than that If we like, we will demand more than Home Rule. The fact is if our spiritual rule is established all other species of authority are as nothing in comparison with it. Whether Hindu's or Anglo-Indian's rule, it does not matter, we shall regard both of them alike, but we fear if Home Rule should interfere with our spiritual rule that would be the worst kind of rule.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 22nd, 1916.

Mussalmans are still under an illusion and are relying upon their friends. To some gentlemen the hope of Home Rule is most fascinating. But if they would turn their attention to the United Provinces they will see what treatment are meting out to us these friends of ours whose home cannot be complete without us and whose power cannot be obtained without us. These people are offended at, and express their detestation of, Mussalman's only crime, that is they have obtained a separate electorate in municipalities. God knows whether they will throw the Mussalmans into the Ganges or send them back to Turkistan or Malabar whence they came.

"The present condition of Mussalmans."

64. The Qaumi Report, of the 24th August, has a leader on the present condition of Mussalmans. In which among other things, it says, "the desire for authority has resulted in a cooling of the blood of freedom and our truth has suffered a death blow."

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 24th, 1916.

The western knowledge was the means of entering the worldly paradise, but we have converted our homes into so many hells. Now there is neither tranquility nor calm within the four walls neither ease nor comfort in the rooms. The mosques have, in fact, become God's House or God thinking us to be unworthy, or we, in accordance with the dictates of humanity, have left God's House for Himself.

Sadhvi, Mysore, Aug. 25th, 1916.

The Century Club, Bangalore.

65. Referring to an article in the Karnataka of Bangalore stating that the Government of Mysore propose to give Rs. 20,000 as a loan free of interest, for the establishment of a new club to be called the Century Club at Bangalore, the Sadhvi, of the 25th August, says:—There can be no objection whatever to the public organising such institutions for their own pleasure or amusement. But it is certainly objectionable that the Government should give loans for institutions of this kind. We may be sure that the Government will not support this scheme.

Mysore Star, Mysore, Aug. 27th, 1916.

The industrial development of Mysore.

66. The Mysore Star, of the 27th August, writes:—The Mysore Government are spending large sums of money in promoting industrial enterprise in the State. By replacing manual labour by machinery, large numbers of people are thrown out of employment, and this leads to widespread distress among the artisan classes. In this transition stage of industrial development therefore the Government should pay equal attention to the revival of cottage industries, and this can best be done by giving special concessions to the dyers, smiths and other artisans, in regard to the removal of barks, shrubs and other raw materials as well as firewood, etc., from Government forests. Instead of spending lakhs of rupees out of the coffers of the State, it would make no difference from a financial point of view, if the Government should forego a part of their revenue, in encouraging the minor artisans who are already engaged in industrial work, by granting them some material concessions, such as those mentioned above and by exempting their production from duties of all kind and providing better facilities for the sale of the articles they produce. These methods of encouraging industries will be far more fruitful than the present policy (which is sound only in theory) of granting scholarships to idlers and others who wish to study at State expense.

Malayalam Papers.

The Cochin budget for 1092.

67. Most of the Malayalam papers received this week also review the Cochin Budget for 1092 M.E. Their comments are, more or less, similar in character to those of the papers already reported on.

Bharathi, Bellary, Aug. 18th, 1916.

The deleterious effects of pig-dung as manure.

68. The Bharathi, of the 18th August,* in its news columns, says:—One C. Suryanarayana Rao, a resident of Samalkot in the Gōdāvari tracts, writes that owing to the dearth of ordinary manure for the cultivation of paddy, pig-dung was being used as a substitute in his district, with the result that a large number of the consumers of rice grown with this manure are developing symptoms of leprosy. The ryots who grow irrigated crops in our district would do well to bear this fact in mind. It is equally the duty of the Government to enquire into the truth of this assertion and inform the ryots about the result of their investigation.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

1. The West Coast Spectator, of the 31st August, states:—"A correspondent to a Madras contemporary very properly asks the question why the customers of a tavern should be allowed to use the street in front of it. This nuisance is prevalent in our town also. The frontage of toddy shops is invariably taken possession of by customers—of the Panchama persuasion especially—and the scenes that sometimes take place beggar description. The police ought, surely, to intervene."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Aug. 31st, 1916.

Tavern nuisances.

2. The Hindu, of the 2nd September, writes:—"Increased expenditure has been one of the prominent features of the Administration of Police in India for the last few years, and the total cost of the department in Madras for the year 1915 rose from Rs. 92 lakhs in 1914 to Rs. 94 lakhs. In spite of this growing expenditure, year after year the same story is repeated, namely, that much difficulty is experienced in all but few districts in recruitment and that there are numerous resignations and desertions. The number of vacancies in the constabulary at the close of the year under review was larger than at the end of the previous year, namely, 1,301 against 1,105, and the official remedy for this phenomenon is as usual 'more pay and better prospects'. . . . . The fact that the position of the constable has not been made attractive in spite of the growing expenditure, is not due to their number but to the 'top-heavy character' of the organisation of the department. Anyhow we are glad that the Government has at last come to see the wisdom of transferring some of the duties of the Police to the village Police, but we are not very hopeful of this transference of functions, were it not also accompanied by the formation of a popular and representative body as the village panchayats for purposes of local supervision in place of the village magistrate. . . . . If we turn to the statistics of crime, their detection and prevention, the picture is anything but encouraging. We find the total number of true cases of cognisable crime under the penal code excluding nuisances, for the year under report was 54,474 against 53,178 on the previous year, and the increase in the number of grave crimes was 1,424 chiefly under house-breaking and cattle theft. . . . . In the matter of detection also the results of the year are not encouraging and the Inspector-General himself writes: 'In spite of slight improvement during the year, the results are undeniably poor on the whole.'"

Hindu, Madras, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

The Madras Police in 1915.

Writing on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 2nd September, says:—"There is nothing striking in the one year's record of work of the Madras Police. The usual increasing scale of expenditure has been maintained, as well as the increase in grave crime as well as total cognizable crime. The usual expert explanation of the Inspector-General accompanies the monotonous accounts of the working of the department. The favourable season and a fall in prices has silenced the convenient argument that increase of crime was due to scarcity and the stress of finding the daily bread. But the war is a handy explanation for the increase of crime, although the Inspector-General does not condescend to take average mortals into his confidence as to how the war has affected crime. The public who grumble at the excessive cost of the Police department and inappreciable results of such heavy expenditure will not find in the administration report of the Police much material for satisfaction. Tilting between the Inspector-General and Indian Patriot, Madras, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

the Government is interesting sight enough, but not at the cost of a crore of rupees. . . . . While it is early to criticise, perhaps intelligently criticise, the Police, it is impossible for any responsible citizen to ignore the serious difficulties of Police administration. Government which attach such importance to the possession of local knowledge by the investigating officers cannot be ignorant of the serious loss of efficiency which the employment of strangers in the higher ranks involves. The fundamental weakness of the whole system lies in this. The superior officers do not know the people; they possess high character and perhaps educational qualifications, but they have to depend upon the Indian subordinate and submit to be influenced by a class not on a high enough character level."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Sept. 5th, 1916.

The West Coast Spectator, of the 5th September, remarks:—"'The Governor in Council has read with interest Mr. Moore's report on the administration of the Police department during the year 1915,' so begins a white book that has been issued from the Judicial Secretariat. We have no doubt the general public also will read with interest the story of the working of a department that is in very close touch with the people, that has consumed ninety-four lakhs of rupees of the tax-payers' money in the year under report. This amount is certainly colossal, and we have to ask how far the outlay of this sum has been justified. This we shall presently see. There is, however, ample evidence in the report that in spite of the very kind and generous treatment meted to the force by the Government, in spite of the enhanced salaries sanctioned, police service has not become popular, has not attracted the right sort of men. . . . . The causes that have led to this state of affairs deserve to be probed into and removed if possible. Even with the increase of pay, right sort of men are not coming forward. . . . . We have more than once pointed in these columns that the low salary now offered will not attract none but village blackguards and farm labourers, but, at the same time, it is necessary that the police force should be efficient and manned by people who can understand the duties of policemen. . . . . We cannot, however, help remarking that a certain type of officer finds peculiar pleasure in sitting upon his men and punishing them. Cases of officers disliking men because they are well-dressed or refuse to pander to their vices have come to our notice. With all his faults, he has many, some of them reprehensible, but he is a human being, he must be treated with some consideration."

WEST COAST REFORMER, Calicut, Sept. 6th, 1916.

The West Coast Reformer, of the 6th September, observes:—"'The Police service is not popular.' This is the solemn verdict just passed by the Madras Government in reviewing the administration report of the Inspector-General of Police for the past year. . . . . Why is the force so unpopular? Why does it not attract sufficient and competent men, and why do they get out of it so soon and in such large numbers? Certain facts and figures mentioned in the report give some clue to the answer. The daily average number of sick was not less than 27 per mile, whereas in the jails it is only 13 per mile. The Government observe that the high sick rate in this department has steadily increased in recent years and calls for enquiry. In one district the sick rate among policemen is so high as 71 per mile. Then coming to discipline and punishments, we find that the percentage of departmental punishments 'continued high,' being 30·9. In a certain part of the presidency no less than 72·9 per cent of the men were punished departmentally! The exacting nature of the work and the severity of discipline are thus two significant factors in the police service, and not a little of its unpopularity must be due to them."

(d) Education.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 8th, 1916.

3. New India, of the 8th September, observes:—"Among the many disappointing features in the speech delivered by His Excellency the Viceroy, the observations on the future of education must take a prominent place. We are told that the educational programme has of necessity been curtailed owing to the exigencies of the financial situation. The same curtailment, indeed, is taking place in England, but almost every responsible body of teachers in the country is vehemently protesting against what educationists regard as a suicidal policy. The children of to-day are to be educationally starved because their elders are quarrelling among themselves. Verily, the sins of the parents come upon the children; but it is a sad commentary on the patriotism of the elder generation that it should allow the citizens of the future to be stunted and starved, because it is not prepared to bear the burden of sacrifice on its own shoulders. . . . . His Excellency proceeds to adumbrate three 'classes of educational efforts in which some suitable progress may be made when better times recur'. First, the education of women. We are grateful to His Excellency for placing women's education in the forefront of his programme; and we hope that steps will be taken not only to spread such education far and wide, but to place it as far as possible in Indian hands and make it truly national in character.

His Excellency the Viceroy and education.

"Then comes the instruction of the blind and deaf and dumb. While agreeing as to the need for laying special stress on this aspect of education, we could have wished that a word had been said with reference to medical inspection of schools and colleges, now recognised everywhere but in India to be the root of all true educational purpose.

"Finally, stress is laid on the need of securing properly trained teachers. On this we can only repeat what we have often said before, that there will be no properly trained teachers until the methods of selection are far different from those at present in use. . . . . Until a new direction is given to education in India, teachers will remain what they are, for only when a new direction is given will the position of the teacher be rightly understood and his status in society be raised to its due dignity."

(e) Local and Municipal.

Inspection of municipal offices.

4. The West Coast Spectator, of the 2nd September, states:—"Some years ago there was a proposal that the Secretary to the Government in the Local and Municipal Department, or some responsible officer deputed by him, should periodically inspect municipal offices. . . . . The inner working of many a municipality is shrouded in mystery, and it is very rare that councillors themselves get, or are allowed to get, an insight into it. There is, of course, a Government order which directs chairmen to place papers relating to the administration at the disposal of councillors for inspection. But to pass an order is one thing, and quite another to see that it is observed or respected. Chairmen have many ways of secreting uncomfortable papers and to escape from the inquisitorial tendencies of councillors. Moreover, the councillor who cares to poke his nose into such affairs, or to take an intelligent and living interest in the administration of his municipality is a curiosity. Should a councillor with a fund of public spirit and inspired by a desire to better the civic administration take it into his head to go behind the scenes, he is at once voted down a nuisance, as a busy body actuated by sinister motives with an axe to grind; and the executive may be expected to throw obstacles in his way. . . . . We know, in fact, municipalities with innumerable skeletons in the cupboard passed off as ideal municipalities by the unsuspecting critics of the Secretariat and the Huzur who have to sit in judgment over them once a year in the midst of other multifarious and taxing duties. . . . . We have also known municipal officials who permit councillors and their friends to fall into heavy arrears and never mention a word about it in the administration report. Papers are kept pending indefinitely, the more so when they throw lurid light on certain phases of municipal administration, and papers relating to encroachments, especially if the delinquents are influential, are bundled and thrown into the lumber room. Funds are mercilessly wasted on works of doubtful public utility, or of utility only to a microscopic section of the public, to the friends and relations of the chairmen or the councillors, shelving works of real public necessity under the stereotyped excuse—'want of funds.' . . . . Of course, a loud cry will be raised by our patriots drawing across the track the red-herring of official interference. But the interests of the man who pays the piper must and have to be safeguarded by the Government, at least till the dawn of a better and stronger civic conscience."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

Street encroachment in Calicut.

5. The West Coast Spectator, of the 2nd September, remarks:—"A correspondent sends us a lengthy contribution complaining about the 'most undesirable and regrettable' condition of several important lanes in this municipality. We can ourselves bear witness to the very deplorable condition of many, and have sometimes wondered how any responsible municipal administration could neglect them. Several years ago, mainly through the efforts of a Divisional officer, some of these lanes were repaired and widened. They have now gone back to the old order, many of them fearfully encroached upon and some of them totally obliterated.

"If the Calicut Municipal Council institutes a thorough survey and examination of land records it will be convinced of the truth of our statement. The conservation of these important means of communication will not entail any heavy cost; and their neglect can only be attributed to civic indifference. We hope that at least now some public spirited councillor will interest the executive in this matter."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

A dangerous municipal building in Calicut.

6. The West Coast Spectator, of the 2nd September, has the following:—"Either mend or end the Talli Caste Girls' School. The building is in a tottering, dangerous condition, 'letting in light through chinks that time has made' and may collapse at any moment. The building is owned by the Municipal Council, and it is a strange irony of fate that the authority which is rough on dangerous buildings should itself own one regardless of danger to human life."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Sept. 5th, 1916.

The President of the Madras Corporation.

7. The Indian Patriot, of the 5th September, observes:—"The citizens of Madras have very many grievances against the Corporation, but once a year Mr. Molony sends a flash of fearful language amidst them, as if out of vengeance for the complaints or memorials against the executive. . . . . A witty man with a command of the English language, which he is not above the temptation of displaying, Mr. Molony writes thus of the future of the finances:—'Our present sources of taxation can yield as little if anything more; new sources must be rendered available to us by legislation. We must go on; we have no collective corporate throat. We cannot with Mr. Micawber quote Addison (cato the naesonest well) and sombrely bethink ourselves of shaving back Sanitation, health, progress, all have to be paid for, but they are well worth the payment.' We must thank the President of the Corporation for such witticisms: only, those who are suffering in this city may have no relish for these."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 5th, 1916.

Local self-government.

8. New India, of the 5th September, writes:—"The Kesari, in its issue of August 29th, gives it as its opinion, that 'the real hindrance to the success' of the work of earnest and public-spirited Municipal Commissioners is 'the continued indifference of the public rather than the occasional interference of Government'. In this connection we think it necessary to point out that this 'indifference of the public' is not due to any deficiency of national character in this direction. It is partly due to the conditions of our past history, on account of which we have, for a long time, lost the habit of earnest public work. It is partly to be attributed to the circumstances of the present, which make most of our public activities bear the stamp of the gambolings of children at play. . . . . The only effective way of change is to institute Home Rule. Then alone shall the dependent attitude ingrained into us by long centuries of conquest vanish: then alone shall we have the freedom to stand forth, as men in our country's cause, and then alone will the touch of reality enter into our public activities. Then nobody will be 'indifferent' to things that really matter."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Sept. 7th, 1916.

9. The Indian Patriot, of the 7th September, writes:—"To one accustomed to always find fault with the Corporation of Madras, the report of the Health officer on the work done last year must come as a surprise It seems, after all, that Mr. Molony has made his force felt, and that he has infused his enthusiasm into his Indian subordinates. Dr. Raghavendra Rao's report is the story of a splendid beginning in the stupendous task that awaits any serious-minded Health officer. Any one who reads the report must acknowledge that the officer who wrote it has the spirit and energy and the special study necessary for his task."

The health of Madras.

HINDU, Madras, Sept. 8th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 8th September, says:—"The superstition common among the compilers of official publications that they should contain nothing more than some dry facts and statistics, seems to have been entirely discarded by the Health officer of Madras Corporation in the annual report on the working of his department for the year 1915. Both in point of interest and information the report is unlike the usual publications, and the great modesty and perfect candour of the author stand in glaring contrast to the high pedestal of the officials and their obtrusive self-consciousness. . . . . But as the figures for other cities go to prove, much remains to be done for our city before it can come in line with others. Of the existing defects we shall refer only to a few. The housing conditions in Madras are very bad and the problem is not only most important but very difficult as well. The schools and colleges, offices and workshops attract a large number of poor and have rendered the city, especially Georgetown, most congested and as the Health Officer suggests there is only one remedy for this, namely, the co-operation of the large employers of labour in building sanitary dwellings for their poor servants at convenient distances from their business centres."

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, Aug. 30th, 1916.

10. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 30th August, remarks.—"The decision of the Government to publish the report of the Public Services Commission is welcome news. It has been unconscionably long in coming and that is because of the fetish of doing nothing of a controversial character. As a matter of fact, however, many controversies have been allowed to rise and have been settled without anything untoward happening, since the outbreak of the war; and any controversy that may be stirred up by the publication of the report is not likely to be of such magnitude as to endanger the safety of the Empire."

The Public Services Commission Report.

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, Aug. 30th, 1916.

11. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 30th August, has the following:—"The question of the failure of the military officers in India to cope with the needs of the army in Mesopotamia was under keen discussion in both houses of Parliament last month and the report of the debate is not very pleasant reading. . . . . We hope that Mr. Dillon is not correctly informed, for if the allegation is true it would show an amount of departmental demoralisation which happily is rare in the annals of military administration of the empire. . . . . There was one observation made by the Times to which Lord Cromer referred and that was that the Viceroy's Council had no share in the decision to send Indian troops to Europe. The writer in the Times also wanted to know whether the Council was ever invited to consider the proposal to advance to Bagdad. It is hardly conceivable that such a momentous step would have been taken without the knowledge and consent of the Viceroy's Council. We find that this observation in the Times is endorsed in a letter to the Daily Mail by Mr. Lovat Fraser. He renews the complaint of the Times that the Government of India had practically abdicated their rights in this matter to Lord Hardinge and to the late Commander-in-Chief and that they had no hand not only in ordering the march of General Townshend's force from Kut to Bagdad but in the entire Mesopotamian campaign. So the complaint is general. . . . . The question of the responsibility of the Viceroy's Council as well as that of the Military department will come into review before the Hamilton Commission and we may be sure that the points raised by Lord Cromer and hinted at by Lord Crewe, namely, the share of the military organisation of India in the breaking of medical arrangements will also come up for discussion. The Government of India and the India Office are now practically on their trial and the result of the investigation will be awaited with interest as it will help in clearing many doubtful and obscure points at issue."

The Mesopotamia campaign.

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, Aug. 30th, 1916.

The Congress Presidentship.

12. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 30th August, states:—"The way in which some of the Congress Committees have bungled over the choice of a president for the next Congress betrays a sad lack of what we should call political commonsense in those who pose as leaders of public opinion in this country. Unless they are bent upon creating a deadlock, it is difficult to account for the nomination of Mrs. Besant by two of the committees, in the face of the fact that the choice lay between Messrs. Vijayaraghava Āchārya and Ambica Charan Muzumdar. Perhaps, they are convinced of the justice of the claims which Mrs. Besant has put forth on behalf of herself. Even then they are not justified in flouting the nominations of the majority of the committees, especially when they did not think of their nominee in the first instance. . . . . As regards Mrs. Besant's claims for the honour, all that we wish to point out here is that the object of the Congress is not to exalt this individual or that to the seat of honour but to enable a representative body of delegates to voice forth the common wants and grievances of the country under the guidance of one who commands at once the confidence and respect of both the people and the Government. There is no meaning in suggesting that the next Congress should be held merely to demonstrate that Mrs. Besant enjoys the confidence of some of the Congress Committees, in spite of the attitude of the Madras and the Bombay Governments towards her, and to vindicate the freedom of the press, as Mrs. Besant would add. . . . . Since writing this we learn that the Reception Committee has gone and done the wrong thing. They have rejected the motion to accept the nomination of Mr. Muzumdar made by a clear majority of the Provincial Committees and have referred the matter to the All-India Congress Committee. A session of the Congress which is to be held under the auspices of so irresponsible a body of men is not likely to prove a success."

WEST COAST REFORMER, Calicut, Sept. 1st, 1916.

The West Coast Reformer, of the 1st September, writes:—"We are amazed to learn that the Reception Committee of the Congress at Lucknow has rejected the election of Babu Ambica Chafan Muzumdar by the provincial committees and has referred the matter to the All-India Congress Committee. Five out of nine provincial Congress Committees—a clear majority of them—having elected Mr. Muzamdar, against two votes given to Mrs. Besant, it was to be expected that the Reception Committee would gracefully accept the decision of the majority, without demur, dutifully suppressing its own predilections. The Reception Committee would have none other than Mrs. Annie Besant to preside over the Lucknow session of the Congress. Mrs. Besant herself desires emphatically to see her elected to the Congress Presidentship—not for her personal glory, of course, but for giving expression in that manner to the Indian nation's protest against the actions which the Madras and Bombay Governments have taken against her. . . . . Mrs. Besant's offensive reference to old congressmen has been keenly resented in Bombay by leaders who have hitherto been her supporters. Apart from this matter, the Reception Committee has done absurdly in rejecting the decision of the majority and thus creating a faction of the worst kind in the congress camp. . . . . This is a dirty job that the Lucknow Home Rulers have created. The All-India Congress Committee has a nasty problem unnecessarily thrust into its hands. It must ask the Reception Committee to mind its legitimate business of executing the mandate of the provincial committees and to welcome the president and delegates with ungrudging hospitality. And for the future, the congress should deprive the Reception Committee of the power to reject the recommendation of the majority of the provincial committees, which is an anomalous relic of the ancient congress system."

Mrs. Besant and older Congressmen.

13. In concluding a leader under the heading "Older and Younger Congressmen", the Indian Patriot, of the 1st September, says:—"It is natural that older men, when they find young men led or misled by those who have not shown any capacity to restrain themselves and when they realise that these young men may be made to commit follies which may involve them in serious consequences, become anxious for their country; and nobody can say that in the circumstances of the country there is no ground for anxiety on the part of the older Congressmen who are described by the correspondent of the Bombay Chronicle as fossils. When proposals are put forward, for which the country is not prepared and when young men are animated by enthusiasm for objects which there is no reasonable prospect of achieving, thinking men naturally feel nervous about the consequences. It is, of course, convenient for enthusiastic and eager spirits to dispose of them as fossils. But the mass of the people, the agriculturist, the trader and the artisan, would rely on their wisdom rather than on the wisdom of Mrs. Besant whose knowledge of India does not extend beyond the Theosophical Society or, at the greatest, the English-educated classes. Her ignorance of Indian sentiments and of the direction in which Indian thought runs is, notwithstanding all she claims to know, stupendous. We do not deny that she has the power to influence young men, many of whom are drawn to her by her various virtues among which are not moderation and sane judgment. The older Congressmen have, at least by their prolonged public service and by their consistent conduct, deserved the confidence and esteem of their country and the attempt is now being made to destroy that confidence and to dethrone them from where they are a force and a power now."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Sept. 1st, 1916.

New India and the Press Act.

14. The West Coast Spectator, of the 31st August, writes:—"The security deposited by the New India Printing Press has been forfeited to His Majesty. The Government of Madras, unlike the other local Administrations, have been good enough to point out the articles that fell under the penalty sections of the Press Act. We refrain from making any observations on these articles as they have very probably been subjected to the scrutiny of the Law officers of the Crown. At any rate, we cannot but regret the course events have taken."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Aug. 31st, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Malabar Herald, for the week ending 2nd September, says:—"The troubles of Mrs. Besant, the arch Theosophist, are increasing. The security of Rs. 2,000 she had deposited under the Press Act has been forfeited with the confiscation of New India newspaper under the orders of the Presidency Magistrate. Naturally an interesting civil suit will crop up in the Madras High Court. In the meanwhile, Mrs. Besant has fallen between two fires, namely, her leadership in the political campaign which would be doomed if she fails and the action of Government against a paper which has defied their authority. It may be said with a degree of accuracy that this event furnishes an extraordinary chapter to the history of political agitation in India, and its development will be watched with the deepest interest. Mrs. Besant has now furnished the maximum security of Rs. 10,000 under the Press Act."

MALABAR HERALD, British Cochin, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

The Western Star, of the 5th September, observes:—"As our readers doubtless remember it was on the 26th of May last that, in her capacity as keeper of the New India press, Mrs. Besant was called upon by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras, to furnish the maximum security of Rs. 2,000

WESTERN STAR, Trivandrum, Sept. 5th, 1916.

under section 3 (1) of the Indian Press Act of 1910. . . . . In its issue of the 28th of August, New India made the brief announcement that it had been informed that its security had been forfeited. We do not suppose that this information could have come in the nature of a surprise to Mrs. Besant and her paper. It has certainly not come as a surprise to the general public. Those who admire and approve of Mrs. Besant's Home Rule campaign, as waged in the columns of New India, equally with those who have been unable to look with approbation upon what they consider a mischievous and most ill-timed political agitation would not have been in the least astonished if the security had been declared forfeit immediately after it had been demanded. Perhaps, the one and only cause for surprise is that the forfeiture was not ordered very much earlier. . . . . We must remark, however, that Mrs. Besant labours under a most erroneous impression when she thinks that she has the whole of India at her back in her Home Rule campaign. Without doubt, she has created a large following which is increasing day by day, but there is a very considerable section of thoughtful and enlightened Indian opinion which looks upon Mrs. Besant's political propaganda as most dangerous and harmful to the truest interests of India. . . . . If it had been only that she was demanding immediate Home Rule, it would not have mattered very much in our opinion. What is deplorable is the ways and means she has been adopting to create converts. She has created a great amount of bitterness of feeling between the rulers and the ruled. The gulf between Anglo-Indians and Indians was narrowing most encouragingly when she took it into her head to launch her campaign and now, we fear that, as one result of her misguided efforts the gulf is wider than it had ever been. She has spared no pains to bring into contempt and disfavour the whole class of British Administrators whom she delights in describing as the bureaucracy. She has magnified the most trifling defects and shortcomings of individual administrators into sources of national peril. She has never hesitated to impute the worst motives to the Government and its officers. Why, every Indian officer whom she believes or suspects to hold views not in perfect keeping with her own is as hateful in her political eyes as a red rag in the sight of a bull. Worst of all, by subtle, suggestive writing, she has been creating a most undesirable spirit among the younger generation of the country, among students and school boys of immature age and impressionable minds, and perhaps, a fair sample of the mischief she has been doing in this particular direction is represented by the article entitled 'The loss of New India,' published on the leader page in the issue of the 29th of August. How can impressionable students and school boys be blamed if they succumb to such seductions as are to be found in this article and in so many others of the same sort? . . . . We are very strongly of the opinion that such a campaign as Mrs. Besant has been waging is fraught with grave harm, and we sincerely trust that the good sense of the general community will range itself courageously on the side of a Government, which, in our view, should have taken much earlier action for putting a stop to a propaganda that has already gone much too far and should properly have been nipped in the very bud. Mrs. Besant, for her part, would render no better service to the country she so ardently loves than she would do did she retire, of her own accord, from the political stage on which she has hitherto cut so undesirable a figure."

United India and Native States, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1916.

15. United India and Native States, for the week ending 31st August, remarks:—"We are not at all surprised to learn from the Bengalee that Sir Sankaran Nayar has not been a persona grata with the Anglo-Indians of North India. Anglo-Indians in this part of the country were conspicuously hostile to the distinguished Indian gentleman because of his sturdy independence and his refusal to kow-tow to his European colleagues as many an Indian, suddenly raised to high office, is only too prone to do. Anglo-Indian society has not yet forgiven him for his trenchant criticisms of their foibles and frivolities in the columns of the Contemporary Review. The spirit of rancour towards Sir Sankaran Nayar, so characteristic of Anglo-Indian temperament in Madras, has apparently spread to Bengal. . . . . Although the handful of Europeans of Calcutta were not interested in Sir Sankaran Nayar's visit, the vast majority of the Indian people took the keenest interest in the visit and this is what matters most, despite the somewhat ostentatiously displayed indifference of the Anglo Indians of Calcutta. . . . . He lived down the insults offered to him by the demoralised Anglo-Indians of Madras on his appointment to his present post, and there is no reason whatever to think that he feels perturbed in the least by this fresh outburst of Anglo-Indian intolerance and bigotry."

Sir Sankaran Nayar.

16. The Hindu, of the 2nd September, observes :—"Curiously enough, the place of honour in the Indian Review for August just to hand, is given to an article on 'Communal representation' by the Hon'ble Mr. Asad Ali Khan in which the Madras Muslim Member of the Viceregal Council urges the necessity for separate Moslem representation not only in the Councils of the Empire, but in the small local bodies such as Municipalities and Taluk and District Boards. Madras may be convicted of being a benighted place from the mouth of its own Muslim representative for Mr. Asad Ali Khan's article tells us in the very first sentence that 'in advanced countries and among advanced nations, the question of communal representation on legislative assemblies and municipal bodies will hardly arise or meet with popular favour'. . . . . The separate representation granted to Muhammadans in the United Provinces to an excessive degree, has proved an apple of discord and a fruitful source of bitter feeling between the two communities. Mr. Asad Ali Khan expresses the pious hope that Madras Moslems like their brethren in the United Provinces will soon enjoy 'the privilege of separate representation through separate electorates on the Madras Corporation as well as on the District Boards and Municipalities.' The article lacks in breadth of view and political vision, and is the outcome of a confusion of ideas. We must deal with the subject at greater length in a subsequent issue."

Communal representation.

HINDU, Madras, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

17. New India, of the 5th September, has the following :—

"From the Far West.

"It is pleasant to hear from far-off Spokane, Washington, U.S.A, that American citizens are not indifferent to the troubles over here. A letter of warm sympathy comes for 'her exclusion from the Presidency of Bombay'. To the free-born American it is an unintelligible phenomenon that a man can, without public accusation, trial, and condemnation in a Court of Law, exile a citizen from the territory he controls".

The Government of Bombay and Mrs. Besant.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 5th, 1916.

18. The following appears in New India of the 5th September :—

"Securities under the Press Act.

"Mrs. Annie Besant attended the District Magistrate's Court at Saidapet yesterday, and deposited the security of Rs. 5,000, imposed on the Vasanta Press, Adyar, by the Local Government. She paid the money under protest, accompanying it with the following note—

"TO THE DISTRICT MAGISTRATE OF CHINGLEPUT.

SIR,

I beg to deposit with you a security of Rs. 5,000, under the order of the Local Government. I deposit it under protest, to prevent the seizure of my press at Adyar, as I believe the order to be illegal.

Obediently,
ANNIE BESANT.

"The Commonweal will be transferred to the New India Press, Madras, as the primary work of the Vasanta Press is theosophical, and the work of the Theosophical Society would be seriously crippled all over the world, if the Local Government proceeded to forfeit this security, impose a second, and

The Vasanta Press, Adyar, and the Press Act.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 5th, 1916.

then forfeit the press as well as the further security. . . . . The more serious matter is, that as the Local Government has chosen to impose security on the press of New India, the seizure of the press will stop the whole of Mrs. Besant's political literary propaganda in India. New India, Commonweal, the ten "New India political pamphlets," and the "Home Rule Series" will all be destroyed. . . . . This wholesale destruction of political literature has no parallel in modern times. It will serve as an object-lesson in the necessity for Home Rule."

HINDU, Madras, Sept. 5th, 1916.

Madras Congress funds.

19. The Hindu, of the 5th September, states:—"A meeting of the members of the Reception Committee of the 29th Session of the National Congress held at Madras in December 1914 is to be held this evening, we understand, for the consideration of an application by the Gokhale Memorial Committee for a contribution of Rs. 5,000. An application by the G. Subrahmanya Ayyar Memorial Committee for a contribution for the purposes for which it has been formed has likewise been made to the Reception Committee. In the report of the Madras Mahajana Sabha for the year 1915, we read that the Executive Committee of the Sabha at a meeting held on the 4th February 1915, passed a resolution requesting the Reception Committee of the Indian National Congress of 1903 and 1914, to place the surplus funds in the hands of the Mahajana Sabha to enable it to extend its premises. The report adds: 'This resolution was duly communicated to the Honorary Secretaries of the Reception Committee of the 29th Indian National Congress, but it is a matter for regret that as yet our letter has not been even acknowledged'. . . . . It seems to us to be a standing scandal and it reflects no credit on the politicians who have had anything to do with the matter that the surplus out of the funds collected by the Congress Reception Committee in 1903, are still undisposed of. We have made various enquiries at different times to find out the exact amount thereof, where it is lodged and in whose name and why it is not utilised for a good public purpose. Our efforts have been fruitless so far. . . . . If memorial funds on behalf of distinguished Indians have to be supplemented by Congress funds owing to the lack of zeal on the part of their originators or otherwise, we are in a position to add a further list of them:—The Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar Memorial Fund, Sir V. Bashyam Ayyangar Memorial Fund and Diwan Bahadur Raghuntha Rao Memorial Fund. We await with interest the resolution of the Reception Committee."

HINDU, Madras, Sept. 6th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 6th September, says:—"The meeting of the Reception Committee of the 29th Session of the National Congress resulted yesterday evening in two sums of Rs. 5,000 and Rs. 2,000 respectively, being voted for the Gokhale Memorial Fund and the G. Subrahmanya Ayyar Memorial Fund. There was a good deal of discussion as to the legality of the proposed grants. . . . . We cannot commend the wisdom of the majority which rejected a suggestion based upon principle and prudence, and committed itself to a line of action which is of very doubtful legality, and which looks queer on the part of persons who are agitating for constitutional methods in the larger problems affecting the country."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Sept. 5th, 1916.

India and the House of Commons.

20. The following appears in the West Coast Spectator of the 5th September:—"The London correspondent of a contemporary regrets that the House of Commons has not seen it fit to devote even a day to the discussion of Indian affairs. It will be remembered that even the budget has not been taken up for the last two years. When asked about it the Premier is reported to have said that he had no objection to set a day apart if there was a 'general desire'!! No general desire was expressed for the recent debate on the Colonial office vote, and the colonies every now and then get opportunities of having their affairs discussed.

"The Cinderella of the Empire cannot even get a few hours, and whenever her case is casually taken up by some kindly member, responsible ministers plead ignorance. She has, we suppose, to be content with occasional references by ministers in their speeches, references which the Indian takes with a certain amount of surprise. With this neglect and indifference going on, who is to be blamed if the people characterise such dictum as the angle of vision theory as mere political catch phrases?"

His Excellency the Viceroy's speech in the Imperial Legislative Council.

21. The Hindu, of the 6th September, writes:—"The meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council yesterday was possessed of more than ordinary interest by reason of two facts, viz., that it was the first meeting of a newly-elected Council and secondly that it was the first Council over which the new Viceroy has had to preside. The opening speech of the Viceroy, under such circumstances, is bound to be canvassed and carefully scrutinised, for the happiness of India or otherwise during the next four-and-a-half years is dependent upon the personality of the Viceroy. . . . . It was, therefore, expected that in his speech yesterday he would give the public an idea of what it had to expect from his Viceroyalty. In so far as that expectation is concerned we must confess to a feeling of disappointment. . . . . Rightly or wrongly certain acts of repression in Madras and Bombay have been attributed to inspiration from Simla, and the public was naturally anxious to know if this impression was correct. Turning to larger matters, the question of India's status in the Empire is now being eagerly canvassed. It was surely 'up' to the Viceroy to give India the assurance that her interests would not suffer in his hands? Again, there was the mysterious decision to publish the report of the Public Services Commission. Surely this was a topic that demanded at least passing reference in a speech of this kind. . . . . The Viceroy was not particularly happy in the choice of subjects for the expression of positive opinions. . . . . We must demur strongly to the extraordinary theory that service on the battlefield should be rewarded by a seat on the Council. We are, of course, fully conscious of the magnificent services rendered by the Indian army in this war and have insisted time and again that those services should find recognition in the removal of grievances under which that army now labours. To be told that a representative on the Council is part of its reward for war services is in the nature of being offered a stone when it asks for bread. From the point of view of strict constitutional theory the appointment of an army representative in the Council is a startling departure. What, one wonders, is the Commander-in-Chief for and what would have happened if under similar circumstances the British army claimed representation in Parliament, considering the pains taken by British statesmen in the past to keep the Legislature free from the influence of the army? The second point to which exception may be taken in the paragraph quoted is the statement that 'it is a question for consideration whether the Viceroy's powers of nomination should not be further enlarged.' The statement discloses a mental attitude on the part of the Viceroy that is to say the least disheartening. It is a commonplace that any future reform of the Council should be in the direction of popularising it by throwing open more seats to election and restricting the powers of nomination. . . . . To hear the Viceroy express such a sentiment under the circumstances is an unhappy augury for the hopes which have been entertained of large reforms in the Indian Councils after the war. The speech is silent on subjects in which the Indian public is interested and on at least one subject the Viceroy's handling of it was distinctly unhappy. If the speech is any indication of the probable character of the administration of Lord Chelmsford, the latter would be of that indeterminate character which is best expressed by the phrase 'a mark time administration.'"

Hindu, Madras, Sept. 6th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 6th September, says:—"It is unfortunate that Lord Chelmsford should have begun his first speech in the Supreme Legislative Council with a plea for increasing the powers of the Government of India to nominate a larger number of members, while the people of this country are asking for the total banishment of the system of nominations. It was a very unfortunate beginning for an otherwise fairly satisfactory speech, in which the Viceroy has distinctly conveyed the promise that his term of office will be one of progress in all directions. . . . . The people of India have learnt by painful experience to attach more weight to acts than to words, and since it has been given to few Viceroys to do even an appreciable portion of the good work they desired to accomplish during their tenure of office, it is advisable to understand Lord Chelmsford's speech as meaning that, conditions being favourable, he will be glad to promote progress along the lines indicated. . . . . In fact, when we view the whole speech, we find that what His Excellency has done is to furnish information that we already have, and to deny the same on subjects which are most important, and which are constantly engaging public attention. That is, indeed, a very strange policy for a Viceroy to follow in his very first utterance in the Supreme Council; and we confess we are unable to guess at the reasons which have prompted His Excellency to withhold from the public knowledge it has every right to demand."

New India, Madras, Sept. 6th, 1916.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 6th, 1916.

India and the empire.

22. Writing under the heading "India still a minor", New India, of the 6th September, remarks:—"In a recent issue the Times comments on the visit of members of the Dominion Parliaments to the mother country, and observes that 'their presence in London has been an excellent opportunity to discuss the constitutional problem, and full advantage has been taken of it'. In the course of the discussion, it appears that Lord Islington took occasion to deliver what is termed a 'sympathetic and reasoned address on India's position in the Empire,' and we are told that his Lordship's remarks 'made a great impression on them'. . . . . We may be permitted to wonder what kind of statesmen are those who imagine that Lord Islington, coached, no doubt, by Anglo-India in the Office of the Secretary of State, in any degree at all represents this country. . . . . For aught we konw Lord Islington may be a very estimable gentleman, but India entirely declines to be bound by his observations, or to assent to the reasonings on which these were founded. . . . . If his sources of information were the same as those from which Mr. Know-nothing Chamberlain draws material for his pronouncements, we can assure the visitors from the Dominions that Lord Islington was the mouth-piece of a bureaucracy and not the spokesman of India herself. . . . . Just as an after-thought: what was Know-nothing Chamberlain doing when India was being mothered by Lord Islington and the Dominion representatives? Who knows? Perhaps he was occupying the time in trying to learn something, in which case we excuse his absence from the meeting, since Lord Islington is at least a better spokesman for India than he is."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Sept. 8th, 1916.

Mr. Gokhale and self-government for India.

23. In a leader under the heading "Mr. Gokhale on the Goal," the Indian Patriot, of the 8th September, says:—Yesterday's New India publishes, unconsciously we believe, Mr. Gokhale's utterance on our goal. Mr. Gokhale had no hallucinations of any kind. He had not fallen under the influences of the new school of Home Rulers who, under Mrs. Besant's banner, are making the political situation uneasy for us. . . . . He recognised that the goal could not be attained by our wishing it, but that we had to take immense trouble and to make immense sacrifices in order to attain it; and if Mr. Gokhale were leaving to-day, he would have been stigmatised by Mrs. Besant as being of the class of yesterdays, as being an older congressman unable to perceive immediate possibilities and anxious to stand well with the Government. . . . . Mr. Gokhale well understood the difficulty of persuading the rulers to make surrenders to popular demands, and he equally understood the importance of guarding against the impatience of his countrymen. . . . . He recognised that his countrymen had to undergo a prolonged preparation before they could assume the full responsibilities of Government, that they had to undergo an arduous course of training and discipline before they could be fit to do so.

"It is easy to talk of self-government, but self-government involves the capacity to maintain peace and order within the country, to prevent foreign aggression, and to do justice between man and man and between class and class. . . . . Mrs. Besant would not have hesitated to cry down Mr. Gokhale as she cried down Sir S. P. Sinha. Both belonged to the same school, and both expressed the same aspirations. Did the latter say anything different from what had been said by Mr. Gokhale? Did he fall short of the goal sketched by Mr. Gokhale? Why was he then so much abused? Only because he had held office and his critics had come to believe that his official experience had made him too conservative for a congress politician. . . . . What has Mrs. Besant done to assuage differences between sections of people? Her whole influence has resulted in the accentuation of those differences, in setting class against class. And if she goes on, as she has been proceeding, these differences must still incite the Englishman against the Indian, the Christian against the Hindu, and so on. Her activity has achieved nothing better, and this is the best preparation which she has effected in order to fit Indians for Home Rule. She has caused an earthquake, a commotion, in the Indian political world, and nothing more. . . . . Mr. Gokhale would have been the last man to embark upon an enterprise of this sort when the Empire was involved in a war of such magnitude. It is a pity that so many men should have lost their head and shown themselves so helpless to resist the persuasive voice of Mrs. Besant who, having entered the Congress through the moderate camp, is fast forcing the moderates themselves into the company of Extremists. Mrs. Besant has not completed the mischief, and she will complete it only with dividing the congress itself, in even more disastrous manner than at Surat. Suppose Mrs. Besant and party capture the congress, suppose she succeeds where Mr. Tilak failed. What then? They may be able to make themselves noisy and troublesome, but they will not a wit advance the cause of the country. Neither in India nor in England will the prestige of the congress rise."

III.—Legislation.

24. The Hindu, of the 4th September, has the following:—"We congratulate the Punjab Government on their good sense and consideration for non-official opinion in withdrawing the proposed District Boards Amendment Bill. We note with pleasure that the Hon'ble Mr. Lumsden, in withdrawing the Bill, said that though the Government considered that the Bill would confer benefits on the District Board administration in the Punjab, they were not prepared to go against the unanimous non-official opinion in the Select Committee. Such an event does not occur frequently in this country, for the bureaucracy scarcely relishes the idea of changing its preconceived lines of action even in favour of strong public opinion. If the example of the Punjab Government in the present instance were followed in other Provinces also, the state of affairs is bound to be in a far better position than what it is at the present day."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1916.

25. In welcoming the news that Roumania has entered the arena on the side of the allies, the Hindu Nesan, of the 31st August, says:—This is really very advantageous to the allies from a military point of view, for they gain a fresh army of fully trained and equipped men, which can co-operate with the allied army in any centre where the latter is a little bit weak. It is besides being beneficial to the allies, positively harmful to the enemy, for he will have to separate portions of his army and send them to the new theatre created by Roumania having taken the field. Now there is the possibility of Bulgaria being attacked from behind by Roumania and the plight of Bulgaria will then be pitiable in deed.

The war in Europe.

Prapanchamitran, Madras, Sept. 1st, 1916; Muslim Dutan, Madras, Sept. 2nd, 1916; Vijayavikatan, Madras, Sept. 3rd, 1916 and Lokopakari, Madras, Sept. 4th, 1916.

The Prapanchamitran, of the 1st September; the Muslim Dutan, of the 2nd September; the Vijayavikatan, of the 3rd September; and the Lokopakari, of the 4th September also welcome this news, and express the opinion that Roumania's action in having joined the allies will not only prove to be helpful to them in many ways, but also lead to the speedy termination of the war.

Vijayavikatan, Madras, Sept. 3rd, 1916.

The Vijayavikatan, of the 3rd September, comments as follows upon the general progress of the war:—Telegrams from our side are announcing victories for us. Perhaps telegrams on the other side will speak of victories for the enemy. Neither has gained a complete victory as yet. Russia's rapid advance in the eastern theatre makes us presume that the strength of her army has been growing fast of late. Otherwise Russia cannot gain so many victories as she is doing now. Who will not be surprised to hear that Russia which was once said to be running away is now gaining fast? The result of all this fighting will be known soon. The truth in the statements of the Russians and the falsehood in those of the Germans will be proved to the world at an early date. We are just now hearing something of the Servians. We are not told where the Servians were all this time, and what they have been doing. Even now we have no information regarding the Montenegrins. We may hear of them also soon because news will be published freely hereafter on account of our side beginning to gain some victories.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Sept. 6th, 1916.

26. The Hindu Nesan, of the 6th September, writes:—As the passage of merchant vessels through the Atlantic has been suspended on account of the war, the Germans have been trying for the last few months to make use of their zeppelins for purposes of commercial traffic. For this purpose, they have manufactured zeppelins of a larger size than the existing ones, and they intend to utilise them for transporting articles of commerce from Europe to America and other countries. It appears that these zeppelins were tried experimentally over the Lake Constance and found to be quite suitable for the new purpose for which they are intended. Their maximum speed seems to be 125 miles an hour and, as they can be steered at a very great height, they can fly without being seen by the enemy.

A novel use for zeppelins.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1916.

27. The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th August, has the following note:—It appears that the Germans are constructing huge zeppelins. The length of each zeppelin is 708 feet. It flies at the rate of 65 miles an hour. It can run a distance of 3,000 miles at a stretch, and can carry 5 tons weight of bombs. It appears that these zeppelins will be ready by October next. It is stated that the zeppelin that raided England recently covered 270 miles in two hours on its return journey.

German zeppelins.

Roumania.

28. The Andhrapatrika, of the 6th September, says:—The chief reason why Roumania has entered into the war is to serve here own interests. By joining the Allies and helping them to win the victory, Roumania can get Bessarabia from Russia and Transylvania from Austria. It is in the belief that she will acquire these two countries, that she joined the war at the present juncture. She did not do so out of mere love for the Allies. But this step of hers will profit the Allies greatly, as will be evident ere long, in all quarters.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 6th, 1916.

The British Ministers.

29. In a leading article the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 2nd September, writes:—Since the very commencement of the present war the British Ministers have held conflicting opinions as regards the utility of their becoming a party to it, and things are no better even today. Lord Haldane who knew Germany intimately and for many years, and had seen with his own eyes her military resources and preparedness for war, gave an opinion, which was not to the taste of most of the other Ministers then in power and consequently he and some others of the same opinion resigned their offices but maintained absolute silence. Now, however, the question whether England did the right thing in taking part in the war, has once more become a topic of furious discussion. It is hardly fair that any open discussion should be allowed when we are in the midst of the war, which is still raging fiercely and that men like Lord Haldane, who kept silence for the sake of maintaining unity at the beginning of the war, should criticise the measures adopted by Government and create dissensions in the land. Mistakes, if any, should certainly be corrected but not to the prejudice of national unity. This war has proved a menace not only to Europe but to the whole world. Those who indulge in such acrimonious discussions at present had, as a matter of fact, ample time and opportunity to bring about peace and good-will among nations before the commencement of the war, but they did not avail themselves of it and like eunuchs resigned their responsible positions. The continued maintenance of British prestige needs united efforts and any internecine quarrels of this kind will only go to encourage the enemy. We trust that the British public will realise the situation and do the needful to bring about the much-needed unity.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

The entry of Roumania into the arena of war.

30. Commenting on the action of Roumania in joining the war on behalf of the allies, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 5th September, writes as follows:—This action on the part of Roumania proves that even self-interest sometimes helps the cause of justice and order. This country kept herself aloof from the war now going on in the Balkans and profited herself very largely by playing a double game of pretending to join one party or another as it suited her advantage from time to time. She feigned friendship for the Teuton powers and got from them enormous supplies of war material and foodstuffs, and now that the scales have turned in favour of the allies, she has openly espoused their cause and has begun to utilise those supplies against the very powers that supplied them. This action of Roumania cannot be said to be very creditable to her sense of honour, and yet some people are prone to excuse her conduct on the ground that she has done so only with a view to put down the barbarities committed by the Germans and Austrians. Be that as it may. Genuine disinterestedness is nowhere to be found in this world. We see the hand of God in this action of Roumania in siding with the allies. It will greatly facilitate the movements of the troops in the Russian theatre of war and enable the Russians to penetrate into the enemy countries from all sides. The position of Austria and Germany will hereafter become so precarious that they will be effectually prevented from sending any help to Turkey and Bulgaria. These two Powers became puffed up with pride on account of their superior knowledge of science and dared to dream of the possibility of bringing the whole of Europe under their heels.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 5th, 1916.

The trend of events at present illustrates the futility of mere scientific power without Providential help. Some men wanting in foresight do not believe in the intervention of God in wordly matters, and think that crimes committed by them will go unpunished. But Nemesis never fails to inflict dire punishment upon them in the end. The time is fast approaching when the supremely intellectual but godless Germans will learn this mighty lesson and suffer for their many sins.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 7th, 1916. (English Columns.)

31. Writing on this subject the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 7th September, remarks:—"If we take a bird's-eye-view of the situation in Europe, we will be struck with the reign of the unalterable law of Nature which promises victory only to the just and thorough defeat to those who trample upon justice and fairplay under foot. One by one neutral powers have begun to join the Allies and it is ten to one that before long not only Greece, but many of the neutral powers of Europe will join them and inflict a memorable defeat on the material and godless fatherland of thought. It is to be noted and observed that the seeds of their defeat are sown by the Germans themselves and that in spite of science and military skill, they cannot help taking the consequences of their own thoughtles thoughts, words and deeds."

The war.

MALAYALA MANORAMA, Kottayam, Aug. 30th, 1916.

Referring to Roumania's entry on the stage, which was delayed till now, because she did not wish to doom herself to the fate of Belgium and Servia, the Malayala Manorama, of the 30th August, points out that her object in doing so is, as in the second Balkan war, to get a share of the spoils after the war, and that it is a clear indication that the war has, on the whole, taken a turn favourable to the Allies.

The war.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Sept. 1st, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Manorama, of the 1st September, expresses satisfaction at Roumania's appearance on the stage, and takes the opportunity to pray once again for the success of the Allies.

BHARATA KESARI, Trivandrum, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

The Bharata Kesari, of the 2nd September, points out that the appearance on the stage of Roumania, who has been carefully watching the events at the various fronts, and who must have well understood the relative strength and resources of the belligerents, is a clear indication of the fact that the war has taken a turn favourable to the Allies.

The war.

MALAYALAM PAPERS.

Other Malayalam papers also refer to the subject and dwell upon the advantages which the Allies are sure to gain by the entry of Roumania into, the war.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 8th, 1916.

32. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 8th September, in its news columns writes:—It has been resolved at the Paris Economic Conference that until and unless Germany gives back the territories she conquered and gives ample compensation to the injured parties, the Allies should declare a strict boycott against her in all matters and show her no concessions of any kind. In days gone by, we, in India, also made use of this potent instrument to put down the wicked, but at the present day we appear to have forgotten it. The employment of boycott against all those who tread a wrong path will greatly help the establishment of righteousness in the world. If it should only be made use of in political matters, it will soon put an end to all autocratic iniquities.

The boycott of Germany.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1916.

33. The Qaumi Report, of the 28th August, has an item under the marginally-noted heading which runs thus:—The telegrams of to-day contain a proclamation addressed to the whole Muslim world from the Sharif of Mecca. Apparently its terms have to do with "multiplication and subtraction" because no total can be made by adding them up! One declaration is "The Turks have sold the Ancient House." But to whom and when? Is this a fact or a flight of the poetical imagination? The second statement is an exhortation "All our brethren in every part of the world should do their duty." What is their duty? In which tradition or where in the Koran should a search be made for it? Perhaps the idea of strengthening the bonds of Islamic brotherhood is something drawn from the Koran and tradition which has imparted a talisman to the Sharif's proclamation.

"Sale of the House of God."

My friend, don't be alarmed!

34. The Qaumi Report, of the 28th August, has the following:—The famous Irishman, Roger Casement, who had eaten the salt of Britain and been raised to a Knighthood before the war, has now had the honour of being elevated to the gallows! English papers report that, as he stood on the scaffold, he cried: "I die for my country." An American writer, Mr. Bigelow, has, however, published some of his private letters which reveal the fact that Roger Casement was a creature of the Kaiser.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1916.

"The friend of Germany."

"God save Germany."

Casement in one of his letters, dated 10th August, writes:—I am staying with John Quinn (the lawyer), an Irish friend. I am getting in touch with a number of Irishmen with a view to interesting them in the Irish Volunteers, but what can one say or do in this welter of blood, horror and crime in Europe? I pray night and day "God save Germany!"

"The desire is good but not quite so much of it."

God's favour.

If Roger Casement was not mentally mad he certainly was a religious maniac and this view is supported by his own words.

If the Almighty has a drop of Protestant blood in His veins, He will be on the side of the Germans, the most peaceful people of Europe, who are fighting for their national life, their industry, their commerce, and for their existence as a great nation.

35. Casement writes:—England's present war with Germany is hypocritical and rapacious Her one aim is to destroy German concord and peaceful rivalry and to sweep from her path the one great commercial people in Europe, whose integrity, capacity and efficiency she dreads.

"In bondage to the Kaiser."

In order to achieve this seven years ago she entered into an unholy alliance with two armed assassins. Unable herself, alone, to strike the blow at her great and peaceful rival, she bribes two bravos, two military mercenaries to do the deed. To France she gave Morocco, which was not hers to give, and violated her own treaty—the Treaty of Algiers, and to Russia she handed over Northern and Middle Persia, which was not hers to bestow."

The editor says that Roger Casement in order to please the Kaiser has given a proof of his knowledge of history and had he not been caught in the Britannic net of the gallows he might certainly have been given a chair in a college of assassins.

36. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 30th August, writes:—Reuter says that Roumania by declaring war on Austria and joining the Allies, has given proof of her far-sightedness. The fact is that Roumania has been thinking over the matter and her far-seeing statesmen who have given affairs their profound consideration and watched the progress of the war have regarded this as a fitting opportunity to throw in their lot with the Allies.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1916.

The declaration of war by Roumania.

There is no doubt that the Roumanians, since Bulgaria joined the Central Powers, have been inclining towards the Allies. This was, therefore, a favourable and suitable opportunity for them to join us in crushing the enemy.

Heavy pressure has been and is being brought to bear on the formidable foe Germany, and her Allies, who have been expecting assistance from her, are greatly perplexed. At the present critical juncture neither Germany nor Austria can render any assistance to Bulgaria or Turkey, for, according to the saying:—"How can he, who has lost his way, guide others?" Germany has enough to do now to help herself. In these circumstances all Germany's schemes for establishing her supremacy in the Balkans are at an end.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1916.

37. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 31st August, referring to the declaration of war by Italy on Germany, says that the former will shortly give practical proof of her declaration by facing the latter in the Balkans. Only a few days ago Reuter telegraphed that most of the allied armies consisting of the British, the French, the Russians, and the Italians had arrived at Salonika. When the Allies advance from Salonika, the Balkans will become a great war-centre, and there is no doubt that the Allies will launch a vigorous attack. It is certain that Italy will have her first opportunity of facing Germany there.

Italy and Germany.

II.—HOME ADMINISTRATION.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 4th, 1916.

38. Referring to the Administration Report of the Police department for 1915 and the Government order thereon, the Swadesamitran, of the 4th September, writes:—The expenditure on this department has been steadily increasing for the last few years and any further increase is not desirable. So we are glad that the suggestion of the Inspector-General of Police, that the salary of the constabulary should be raised if the large number of resignations and desertions are to be avoided, has been vetoed by the Government, and we welcome the alternative proposal of the Government that the number of the Police force should be reduced and the money saved thereby utilised in increasing the salary of the constables. If the Police will behave properly towards the people and make the latter come forward to help them, it will be a very desirable course indeed to reduce the strength of the Police force. If the constables are paid increased salaries, considering the arduous nature of their duties, and a better type of men are thus attracted to join the force, it may in a way help to reform the force itself. The Government thinks that a portion of the duties of the Police can well be delegated to the village Police. The talayaris and vettis, who form the village Police, are paid only Rs. 4 per mensem in many districts, and, if their work is increased, they will be able to attend only to the Government work and their other duties will suffer. So their salary should also be increased in proportion to the increase in their work. We would suggest that, even in their case, their number can be reduced and a better type of men can be recruited for these posts by paying them more decently, their work being supervised by village headmen. This will lead to an improvement in the work turned out by the village Police. It can be tried as an experiment in some places. The action of the superior officials in the Police department in declining to grant leave to the constables and punishing them after their return to duty, in case they stop away without leave, ignoring altogether the facts that they have to work day and night and that they have no holidays whatever, shows ignorance of human nature on the part of these officials. The death-rate in this department is 27 per 1,000 that is 15 per 1,000 more than the death-rate even in jails. This shows that the work of this department is almost killing. This fact, coupled with the harsh treatment meted out to the constables, naturally makes it difficult to get good men to enter the department. The superior officials should be made to understand that they can expect satisfactory work from their subordinates only if they treat them well. We learn from the order of the Government on this report that it intends to introduce some changes in the constitution and work of this department. If this is true, the Government would do well to take the popular leaders, as much as the officials, into its confidence in defining the lines of reform.

Police administration in this Presidency.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 2nd, 1916.
